Developing Coos Coal Field

Southern Oregon is destined to be materially benefited by the development of a big coal field on the Coquille river, near Riverton, Or., according to H. C. Day, of Eugene, who is interested in the project and is now in Portland. A company has been organized and capitalized to develop the property which consists of 240 acres, says Mr. Day. It is accessible to deep water shipment and Mr. Day points out that big steamers can move directly up to the company's bunkers on the river, load their cargoes and move safely out over the bar at Bandon. Development of the company's property has been going on for the past 18 months, and most of the buildings and equipment necessary for operation have been installed. "Oregon has a constantly growing need for good coal," said Mr. Day. "We are now depending upon Utah and other points for our coal when we have a great amount of coal undeveloped within our own state. We are going into the business of developing our property with the idea of making it one of the big industries of the state. The company which will operate the mine is composed largely of Eugene men."—Oregonian.

Salvation Army Man Here

J. E. Inman, of the Salvation Army, and a financial agent in the Army's state wide campaign to raise funds, came over to Coquille yesterday to check up and close the drive. He found that the work had not been completed here, so jumped in and is doing considerable of the soliciting himself. He may be here several days. Mr. Inman is 73 years old but does not appear to be much more than half that age. In fact he is so young looking that he fooled the U. S. navy officials and was accepted as an enlisted man during the world war, serving on the U. S. S. San Diego. He served as a scout in the Sioux Indian war with "Buckskin Bob" Smith, Curry county pioneer. A co-incidence was that a son of Smith was a shipmate of Mr. Inman on the San Diego.

Since the war, Mr. Inman has been located at Roseburg and is a member of the Elks lodge there.

Present Him With a Watch

Just before the ball game here last Sunday Art Berg was presented with a $75 watch and chain by local baseball fans in recognition of his services to the team. Being a resident of Coquille, he has pitched this year without salary and the fans took this means of showing their appreciation. J. E. Norton made the presentation speech and in a few well chosen words extolled Mr. Berg's good sportsmanship, told of the fan's appreciation and handed him the gift.

To Advertise Coos County

Mr. Parker was given authority to have such display made up as a sample and further steps will be taken later on.—Times.

Irony and Big Eyes

Help was scarce, and the packers had to be treated with great care to keep them from walking out. The foreman of the big apple-packing house had suffered almost all he could stand. A lull came in the rush of work, and one of the sorters, a thin little girl with big eyes and an Irish name, began to try her hand at packing. "Here, you!" cried the foreman, glad to relieve his feelings on some one. "Cut that out. Put that paper back!" The girl's eyes grew larger as she meekly laid the paper on the table; but she kept them fixed on him, unabashed. "Put it on the shelf where it belongs," he ordered. She did so and with her wide eyes still fixed on his said gently, "You don't have to speak kind like that to me. I ain't sick or nothing."—Youth's Companion.

Ecclesiastical Confections!

A young American tourist stepped into a shop in a Scottish town one Sunday recently to buy some candy for a Scotch lassie of his acquaintance, and as soon as the customer ahead of him had been served he asked for chocolate creams. "I dinna sell chocolate creams on the Sabbath," the old dame behind the counter said, severely. "But," the young man protested, "you sold candy to the woman who has just gone out." "Aye, some ecclesiastical confectionery, but nae chocolate creams," the old dame declared. "Some what?" gasped the tourist. "Ecclesiastical confectionery—that is, peppermint drops, pan draps and ginger lozenges," she graciously explained, and added sternly, "but nae chocolate creams."—American Cookery.

Before the Golden Age

Archeology has, in our day, become one of the most vividly interesting and thoroughly alive of pursuits, continually opening up new avenues of inquiry, and giving light and inspiration to the whole field of art. Archeological discoveries of the last fifty years have shown that the golden age of Greek art was more than two thousand years in the making. It is strange enough to think that previously it was regarded as a spontaneous growth, with origins veiled in impenetrable mystery. Now, the adventurer into the great regions of knowledge, where the story of Greek civilization unfolds itself, may become possessed of at least the main facts of prehistoric epochs long before Greek art became Greek.—Scribner's Magazine.

Japanese Form of Greeting

If a man in an American city met an old friend from the country and proceeded to double himself up into the form of a jackknife and then sit down on the pavement, he would probably be removed without delay to the nearest asylum. But if a man in Japan failed to observe this ceremonial in greeting a friend he would be regarded not only as unfriendly but positively lacking in courtesy. This form of greeting is one of the oldest customs of Japan. In this respect Japanese politeness exceeds even that of the French, and the "bowing and scraping" habit is not confined to any particular class.

"It Swings Like a Winchester"

The seasoned woodsman is an excellent judge of what makes a good axe.

A Winchester axe with its carefully shaped contours, weight centered below the eye, bit of high grade crucible steel makes a deep, smooth cut with every blow. The man who swings an axe all day finds that a "Winchester" saves his muscles and nerves.

Winchester axes are made in many patterns and weights in single and double bit axes—for the lumberman and the householder.

Winchester cross cut saws are designed for rough, rapid cutting. They bite their way quickly through the log, saving the strength of the users.
