"Next to Godliness"

Cleanliness covers the whole field of sanitation. It is the beginning and the end. Uncleanliness is one of the deadliest of removable causes of disease. Filth is dangerous because it may contain the germs of disease. Cleanliness or absence of dirt is not merely an aesthetic adornment, but is above all a sanitary safeguard of importance which has been learned by hard experience. Personal cleanliness is more important than public cleanliness. Avoidance of personal filth is far more necessary than, for example, cleanliness of streets, back yards, and the like.—Oregon State Board of Health.
