Killed at Camp Four

Struck full in the face by the end of a broken cable, as it whipped through the air, Harry Lay, 25, employee of the Coos Bay Lumber company at Camp Four on Dement creek, was instantly killed Monday, says a Myrtle Point press dispatch.

The body was taken to the Schroeder Undertaking parlors, pending completion of arrangements to send it to Oklahoma. Two brothers, also employed at the camp survive as well as other relatives living in Oklahoma.

Lay and other employees were at work moving a heavy piece of machinery and had one end of a cable wrapped several times around a stump. The cable broke at the stump and hurtled through the air striking Lay in the face before he could escape.

Was on the Job

Not every boy sitting on a bank watching a train go by knows what he sees; but a boy near The Dalles did. He saw a broken wheel on a freight car and flagged the conductor. The company gave him a gold watch for preventing a possible wreck. It will be interesting to watch that boy as he grows up, says the Oregonian.

What $2.25 Will Do

For $2.25 you can have the weekly visits of the Coquille Sentinel and the Oregon Farmer—$2 of each—for a year.
