Had Relatives at Bandon

The fate of Amundson, the explorer and his party who left Spitzenberg last Tuesday to fly over the north pole and who have not been heard from since, is of more than ordinary interest in Bandon, since Mr. Amundson is a second cousin of Mrs. Oscar Langlois of the lighthouse station. He was a cousin of her mother and is also related to her father's side of the family. Just before leaving Seattle on his trip north, Mr. Amundson sent Mrs. Langlois photographs of himself and equipment. Mr. Langlois is anxiously listening in on her radio for the first news of her cousin.—Western World.

Health of Presidents

Writing of recent presidents in the Outlook, Dixon Merritt says:

The heart of the present misconception of the terrible weight of the President's work is in the belief that two Presidents recently have been worked to death. The fact is that Wilson, though he was one of the hardest workers that the White House has known, was in better health there than he ever was anywhere else. He came to the White House a frail man suffering from a chronic disease. He had worked himself to death in his years as a teacher. It was his custom all his life to work ceaselessly for days on end, until he was exhausted, and then to sleep the clock around twice. He picked up weight and vitality after he came to the White House, but his final trip across the country broke him down.

Harding was almost the opposite of Wilson in nearly every particular. Hard work was out of his line. The duties of the Presidency irked him terribly, but it is not true that the weight of responsibility wrecked him. Those who knew him at work say that he was practically impervious to worry. Harding simply got sick and died. If there is anything more than that to the story, it is locked behind that secret door to which the pry of the reporter does not constitute a key.

We have now in the White House another man who came there none too robust. Mr. Coolidge has gained eight pounds since he became President, and the change in his appearance, while not as striking as the improvement that Wilson underwent, is marked. Very clearly, he is not a man worked to death. His former private secretary, Mr. Giamp, recently said in a magazine article, "Calvin Coolidge will thrive on the tasks of the Presidency."

The Sentinel editor who got a close-up of President Harding and Mrs. Harding in a church vestibule the year before his death, was much impressed by his sallow complexion and saw that he was anything but a well man, and so was not surprised at his subsequent breakdown. Indeed, his impression then was that neither of them was in good health, but in regard to the president he would not have expected an early demise, and in his case it was, of course, evident that, as in Wilson's case, his speech-making trip to the Pacific coast hastened the end.

Death of Stacy Panter

Stacy Owen Panter, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Panter of Bandon, died last Friday evening after an acute illness of two and one-half days, says the Western World. Mr. Panter was born September 26, 1898, on the Coquille river near Riverton, being 81 years, 7 months, and 27 days old at the time of his death.

He lived the greater part of his life at Bandon except for several years spent in San Francisco and Portland. When about 12 years old he became afflicted with St. Vitus dance and had been in more or less poor health all of his life. He was injured while loading wood on the Dora at Prosper when he fell from the dock to the deck of the boat. He suffered heart trouble and was ill for a long time following a severe attack of flu six years ago. During the past few years he had visited different parts of California and northern cities trying to regain his health, but with no success. In the last four months spent in Bandon he seemed to be improving, and had gained eighteen pounds, when he took the flu again and succumbed.

Funeral services were held Sunday at the Ellingson chapel, with many friends of the family in attendance.

Besides his parents, he is survived by the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. R. L. McMullen; Mrs. J. P. Murie, Mrs. L. B. Hatton; T. W. Panter; W. A. Panter; A. R. Panter; A. E. Panter; and A. C. Panter.

The Panter family are pioneers in conducting the river transportation lines, and Stacy had papers for mate and captain. He was the youngest boy in the state to take the examinations, being 17 old at the time.

SOME GOOD FEATURES OF SINK ARRANGEMENT

Good Sink Arrangement in Virginia Farm Home.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Several good features of sink arrangement are shown in the picture, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture in a Virginia farm home. To begin with, the sink is enameled iron, easily cleanable, and placed sufficiently high for the housewife to work without bending over. It has a drainboard on each side, and hooks on the narrow shelf just above it from which are suspended in plain sight all of the small pieces of equipment needed in cooking and cleaning. Whenever any of these articles are washed they are hung up immediately, thus saving steps. The soap basket suspended between the faucets is useful, also the sink colander, the soap shaker, the nearby towel bar, and the handy place for keeping the dishpan. Well-thought-out details in a kitchen are what contribute to comfort in doing the necessary work.
