More Truth Than Poetry

After receiving in one mail four requests for information on the financial standing of people who were buying automobiles on the installment plan, a Coquille citizen was moved to express his thoughts in the following — and there is more truth than poetry in it, too.

Bill Jones said "times is gettin' tight Ah' livin' seems derned high; For though I try with all my might I'm just a gettin' by;

The wolf's a snappin' at my heels And I can't get no rest. I'd like to know just how it feels With spare cash to be blest.

I pay my bills 'when they come due And have enough to eat And clothes for comfort—yes, that's true, And good shoes for my feet.

But derned if I can sport a car Like Jackson 'cross the way. Why nothin' kin his pleasure mar He's out just every day

A tankin' up his Lizzie And a steppin' on the gas It jest plum makes me dizzy To see that hombre pass.

He sure has got the system He's togged right out in style And Bradstreet's sure must list him For a pretty handsome pile."

Then Bill went scoutin' round to see Just how the thing was done Then wondered how such things could be.

For he found out by Gum That Jackson owed the bank a note And it was long past due. He owed for his last winter's coat And owed the grocer too.

In fact, he owed most everyone And never paid a cent And 'now his race was nearly run. His credit badly bent.

So Bill says: "Well I'm satisfied To travel at my pace It's a dern sight better when you ride To not skid on yer face.

I'll jog along until some day I've saved a little spec And then I'll speed along my way With a bus that's mine "by Heck."

A Criminal From Portland

Bert Dawson, of Portland, was arrested about 2 o'clock Wednesday morning while attempting to take gasoline from trucks of the Marshfield Fuel & Supply Co. Bert Cohen, manager who had been working a late shift directing repairs, returned and detected him and called Merchant Patrolman Art Richardson who picked him up.

Dawson had evidently just arrived from Portland. He was driving a Dodge car registered under the name of a Portland meat market owner. He claimed that the owner loaned him the car but the officers are looking into this. Judging from his effects, he was acting as agent for different things.

Dawson had driven his car in along side the trucks. When first detected, he claimed that he was trying to get just enough gasoline to cleanse the grease off his hands but this did not explain the presence of a bucket and jug. Then he claimed he was short of funds and couldn't buy gasoline but he was found to have a $10 check in his effects. He first claimed he came from Powers. He is a young chap.

The Dodge car driven by Dawson is listed as a stolen car in a bulletin received from the Portland police department. The car was stolen from the A. A. A. service station on Chapman street, Portland.

Orders to hold Dawson on the charge of stealing a Dodge touring car were received from Chief Jenkins of the Portland police department by Chief Jack Carter Wednesday afternoon.—Coos Bay Times.
