Rocky for Reedsport Road
 In discussing the endeavors to get the seven miles of road from the end of the Roosevelt highway north of Lakeside to Reedsport opened, the Roseburg News-Review says:
 "A regrettable situation has arisen from the request of Coos county, our congenial and progressive neighbor on the west, that Douglas county expend $100,000 in the construction of nine miles of permanent, modern highway from Reedsport to the Coos county line, to connect with a projected link from Marshfield. The reasonableness of the request is recognized by the Douglas county court and that body has expressed itself as anxious to comply with it; but unfortunately the county is confronted by an apparently insurmountable barrier. The only means by which the county could finance the desired improvement would be a bond issue, and the limit fixed by law for bond issues for road construction has already been reached by Douglas. From this it would seem that the project would have to be put out of mind for the present at least. Of course, there is the alternative of voluntary road district taxation, but such a method in this instance would hardly meet with favor because the region contiguous to the proposed road is so sparsely settled that taxation to defray an obligation of $100,000, added to the regular annual taxes for other purposes, would prove a very heavy burden. Another alternative would be a toll road, but experience has shown such highways to be decidedly unpopular. There may be a way out of the dilemma, but so far no miracle man of finance has come forward to designate it."

Look Well at the Well

(Written for the Oregon Tuberculosis Association, by Dr. B. S. Herben, of New York.)
 When we go to the "country fair," whether by train or auto, we would do well to be cautious, for it is the vacationist who is apt to come down with typhoid fever while in the country or upon his return. Typhoid fever is spread by the human excreta (bowel and urinary discharges)—and it is no wonder that it has been said that for every death from this disease, someone should be hung.
 Water from wells or streams or springs which drain territory contaminated by the human beings is one of the most fertile sources of the disease; and the milk supply is readily contaminated. Hands of careless people, and the foods under their touch pass along this vicious germ, the typhoid bacillus.
 When you eat or drink the typhoid germs, your digestive apparatus sends them into your intestinal tract where they commence to play at mischief. In the walls of the intestines are structures which have to do with the digestive processes—little spots which have been named Peyer's Patches. When the typhoid bacillus get into the neighborhood of these patches, they start an inflammation in them.
 The Patches become red and swollen and finally gray as the inflammation progresses to pus formation. The tissue becomes dead and finally sloughs or rots off to leave an ulcer where the Patch was. This ulcer may go so deep as to perforate the muscle wall and even the peritoneum (the membrane covering the intestine) and if it goes through that membrane, the serious complication of "peritonitis" may follow. Not only is there a leakage of the intestinal contents out into the free spaces between the organs of the abdomen, but there may be dangerous hemorrhages as well. It is usually a fatal day for the patient when the Patch becomes a hole.
 Therefore, before you go to the country, get a typhoid vaccination done by your doctor. Uncle Sam requires it for all his soldiers. While you are away, carefully consider your milk supply and before tasting the water be suspicious. Look around at the tourist camp for a certificate of inspection which shows that the State Board of Health has inspected the premises and analyzed the water supply and found them safe. Over 300 Oregon camps already bear this sign. If in doubt look for the certificate.

Mrs. Coolidge Learning to Swim
 A Wednesday's dispatch from Swampscott, Mass., says:
 Finding the waters of an ocean swimming pool near White Court to her liking, Mrs. Coolidge is learning to be a real swimmer. Under the tutelage of Miss Mary Hernan of West Medford, Mass., an expert swimmer, who is spending the summer on the north shore, the wife of the president today went through the elementary stages of the side stroke, which she is attempting to master.
 A. N. Gould, of Coquille, was in this city Wednesday.
