

Saved Himself by Jumping

Years of training on the gridiron and the cinder track proved a valuable asset to Fred Carlberg, University of Oregon and Multnomah club athlete, at camp 6 of the Coos Bay Logging Co. near Coquille Tuesday.

Had it not been for his athletic ability Carlberg would probably be in a hospital cot with a broken leg, instead of hobbling on crutches with a badly sprained ankle.

It all happened Tuesday morning at the logging camp where Carlberg had obtained a job as a "chaser" to procure enough funds for another year at the university. A large fir log was being hauled to the logging railway when one end of it suddenly struck a stump just in front of Carlberg. The other end veered around and headed straight for his thigh. Bringing his high jumping experience to bear Carlberg leaped up toward the sky. The result was the full force of the log did not hit him and only the top of it grazed his ankle, spraining this member.

He was given medical attention and expects to be back on the job within a week or two. Carlberg plans to make a bid for the U. of O. for all team next fall. He played with Multnomah club of Portland during the past season.—News.
