Softwood Floors Armor Clad

Reams have been written on the subject of paint and its possibilities. Paint beautifies. Paint protects. Paint enhances property value. Paint helps prevent disease, affords surfaces that are more sanitary, easier to clean. Paint saves labor. Paint makes for happiness. All this and much else has been said about paint, and the same things are said of varnish.

Everyone knows that battleships are encased in steel, armor plate. This is to keep shot and shell from penetrating vital parts and certain paints and varnishes have precisely this same characteristic. When fully dried, they have a toughness, entirely comparable to actual metal. In their armor-like impenetrability to the "shot and shell" of wear and weather, they do exactly for the surfaces they coat what the armor coat is doing for the battleship.

Take for instance, a softwood floor. In the very nature of things it is comparatively soft and subject to abrasion. The hammering, shuffling, scraping, scarring abuse it gets makes it soon scuff up, wear thin around the knots and wear out. But give this same floor a coat or two of the right kind of paint or varnish, and what happens? It immediately becomes armored—takes on much of the durability and the appearance, too, of hardwood. Because of the astonishing hardness and toughness of its protective surface of paint or varnish, no wear comes directly upon it. Its strength is never weakened by the thinning, scuffing-up process, and it lasts indefinitely. Such floors are always more beautiful and sanitary, and the refinishings necessary to keep them so, come at such long intervals that the cost of maintenance is really but a trifle.

One well-known paint that gives this result to floors is Acme Granite Floor Paint, so-called because of its granite-like hardness and durability when dry. Other paint and varnish of equal desirability are sold here in this locality by the Acme Quality Paint and Varnish Service Station, representing the Acme White Lead & Color Works of Detroit.
