Re-elected to National Board Word has just been received that Miss Genevieve Chase was re-elected to the Presbyterian National Board of Education at the national convention held in Philadelphia early in May, to cover a period of three years. One year ago Miss Chase was elected to this office to fill an unexpired term and at that time had the distinction of being the youngest person ever elected to membership on this board.

The Board appointed Miss Chase to hold summer conferences during vacation with an itinerary as follows, spending about six days at each conference: In June, Storm Lake, Iowa; Emporia, Kansas; Estes Park, Colorado; Birmingham, Pennsylvania. In July, Ocean Park, Maine; Blairstown, New Jersey; Saltsbury, Pennsylvania. In August, Wooster, Ohio; Saltsbury, Pennsylvania; Blairstown, New Jersey.

Following the conference work Miss Chase will attend the National Y. W. conference and then have barely three weeks in which to relax before taking up work at Columbia College for the coming year.

Scouts Have Good Ball Team

The Boy Scout baseball team is the real thing. They met a team of business men at the bay park last Monday evening and let them down by a score of 11-2. The whole team played good ball for youngsters, and the pitching of "Jug" Lorenz was a deciding factor in the game. Another game will be played next Monday evening when the merchants hope to have more of the younger men out.

Ed Vinton has been wearing a badly-damaged optic since the game. He got into the fray for one inning as umpire, and while his decisions may have been "rotten," it was a foul ball which he stopped with his right eye that caused the damage.

His Winning Stenographer

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

"I DON'T mind telling you," confided young Jimmy Dawson to his friend Charley Underwood, as they smoked their post-lunch cigars in the Belmont grill, "that Lesbia Carroll is just about all the brains in our firm. That girl's a marvel!"

"She's an easy creature to look at, also," replied Charley. "I've known her for years."

"Right!" Then Dawson frowned. "There's something worrying me. The little simpleton has entered this foot contest for the world's best-looking and speediest typist, and I'm scared silly she'll win."

"If she did," finished Charley, "she'd be snapped up by 'movie' men and the firm would lose its brains."

"You've said it," returned his friend gloomily. "But worse even than that, the girl would be utterly spoiled."

"Pardon my inquiry, but have you—any personal interest in that matter?" asked Charley gently.

"Certainly not!" retorted the other with apparent sincerity. "Pure altruism alone incites me. If I could think of some scheme by which she could be kept from entering the finals, I would not hesitate to save her from herself."

"You'd stop at nothing?"

"Well, almost nothing!"

"I've got it, then!" and Charley slapped his knee. "You say your sister is at her place on Long Island? Well, listen, here!"

An hour later, Lesbia Carroll looked up from her desk to see her employer striding towards her with an expression of determination on his face.

Looking down into her blue eyes, "Are you still set on being in that contest?" he demanded.

Lesbia tossed her curly bobbed head. "Certainly," she said. "Why not?"

Now young Jimmy had not been altogether sincere about his interest in Lesbia. In spite of himself, it was fast growing personal, but he would not recognize it if Lesbia persisted in advertising herself throughout the country.

Therefore, he now hedged somewhat in his reply. "There are many reasons, Miss Carroll. You are bound to lose interest in your work with us. And—and—oh, hang it—"

Lesbia flushed. "Please, Mr. Dawson. Please!"

"It's no use," he presently telephoned Charley. "She will go into the thing and with her looks and speed, she's bound to win. I'll get hold of my sister—lucky they used to be old friends in school—and we'll carry out that little plan. Means I've got to get in a substitute here, but it's worth the trouble. It's up to you to see that your arrival with Lesbia is quite too late for the final contest."

Now to do Jimmy's sister justice, she was not informed as to just why Lesbia was sent to her for a week-end visit other than that Jimmy thought she needed a rest. But because she had been asked to include Jimmy's old friend, Charley Underwood, in the house party, she suspected a love affair and managed to throw them into each other's company as much as possible.

Therefore, upon that poor man fell the duty of playing Machiavelli at the same time that he was supposed to be enacting the role of an ardent Romeo. And it was probably not the first time that a well-meaning friend cursed his well-meaning friendship for precipitating him into unseen difficulties.

On the morning when the final contest was to be held, Jimmy Dawson's cruiser swung slowly up the East river. Her owner was pacing the dock at which she was to land, and now and then he glanced nervously at his watch, while a few yards away, a taxicab with its engine still running, quivered on the cobblestones.

As the boat drew near, Jimmy went over to the top of the ladder which led down to the float and, as Lesbia started up, he reached down and grabbed her arm. "Hurry, Lesbia," he cried.

"The contest was postponed until eleven, but we've only about fifteen—no, thirteen—minutes, in which to make it. Hurry!"

But Lesbia seemed in no great haste, while Charley, now on the scene, was regarding Jimmy with an expression decidedly curious.

"Hurry," said Jimmy. "Only twelve minutes!"

"But I'm not going to enter!" cried Lesbia. "I know that Charley, for some reason or other, doesn't want me to. Ever since we left your sister's, he has been inventing delays and imagining that one thing after another was wrong with the boat. We've stopped twenty times on the way!" Then she slipped an arm through Charley's.

"Mr.—er—Dawson, Charley and I—she paused.

"Sorry, old man," said Charley. "You see—we've gone and fallen in love and now she's won me, she doesn't seem to care about winning anything else!"

Jimmy grabbed their hands. "Congratulations!" he said, and there was no doubting his sincerity.

"But later when the two men were alone, Charley could not refrain from just one question. "How come, Jimmy, you made such a right-about-face about Lesbia's going in for that affair?"

Jimmy looked sheepish. "I—I sort of lost interest in what she did," he confessed. "And I didn't want it on my conscience that I'd stood in her way. I—I say, Charley, you ought to see the girl who's taking her place! Gloria her name is—and, gosh, she's got brains, too!"
