Over 78 percent of the world's vehicle registration of 29,505,000 is in the United States, the Oregon State Motor Association has learned.

Although the Pomona Granges have ever been favorable to the improvement of our state and county highways, they are usually found supporting the "pay as you go" method. This was the attitude of McKinley Grange which is opposed to the proposed county bond issue for improving county and market roads.

It is probable that Hal Hoss, republican nominee for secretary of state, will be appointed to that office by Gov. Patterson, as successor to Sam A. Kozier who resigned the office, effective Sept. 1, to take the position of budget director for Oregon, to which he will be appointed by the governor.

We wonder why some newspapers pay so much attention to these periodic outbreaks by doctors on the danger that lies in kissing. Newspapers will probably have a considerable influence in helping decide whether Hoover or Smith shall be elected president this fall, but when it comes to warning against possible contagion from the osculation microbe their influence is nil.

The resignation of Herbert Hoover as Secretary of Commerce was received by President Coolidge at the summer white house in Wisconsin last Saturday. The president has not stated when he will accept the resignation so that Mr. Hoover can leave for his home in Palo Alto, Calif., to receive official notification of his nomination as republican candidate for president of the United States.

George E. Chamberlain, probably the most noted democrat ever to take part in political affairs in the Pacific Northwest, died in Washington, D. C., last Monday. Twice governor of the republican state of Oregon, and twice U. S. senator he proved his ability as a statesman, and during the World war was regarded by those of all political faiths as one of the nation's leaders.

Born near Natchez, Miss., Jan. 1, 1854, he came to Oregon in 1876 and rose from teacher, lawyer, state legislator, to the highest places of honor that the state can bestow.

NEW PARTY LEADERSHIPS

Whatever the outward manifestations in the way of personnel may be, it cannot be denied that in the councils of both the major political parties in the United States there are evidences of what actually amounts to a new leadership. There has come forward, in the natural course of events, a new generation of men and women voters, assertive, influential, and, it appears, measurably powerful. Lacking, perhaps, some of the qualities of political generalship, they have impressed the recognized leaders of the parties by reason of their numbers and their courageous aggressiveness.

How potent is to be this new influence in national affairs? How wise and constructive are these dictators of party policies who assert the right to determine the form and substance of political platforms and to veto or approve the selection of candidates for office? The American people have observed, within a fortnight, two significant and illuminating instances of the assertion of this new influence. One of these was at Kansas City; the other, at Houston. At the former, during the meetings of the Republican national convention, there was reflected the unmistakable determination of those constituting a new generation of voters to impress their preferences upon the titular directors and managers no unanimously and so emphatically that their demands could not be ignored or denied. The result is political history so recently written that the crusade and its result are contemporaneous.

While Tammany Hall and its directing leaders may claim or seek to claim credit for the result at Houston, it is nevertheless a fact that a few years ago it would have been impossible for them to mobilize the rank and file of the Democratic party in support of a candidate openly sponsored by them, or to have persuaded the representatives of Democrats west of the Alleghenies to acquiesce in the adoption of a platform dictated by them.

The apparent ease with which this latter fact was accomplished would seem to indicate that the traditional foes of Tammany within the ranks of the Democratic party have failed to pass on to the men and women now active and powerful in its deliberative councils the righteous prejudices which they themselves were never afraid to express by their voices and votes. And so it is that the phrase makers of Manhattan Island are able to carry a plausible message to the people of the South and West, promising them a new code which shall embrace some satisfying theory of industrial and farm relief and "personal liberties" unlimited by even the voluntary action of the people themselves. Unless those who achieve, by whatever process, the position of political leadership gain a proper realization of their responsibilities, they may not, in the end, accomplish as much as by a proper exercise of their veto power.

It is well that the results most recently announced are tentative only. There is time between now and November to undo whatever is amiss and to recall decisions hastily made. There remains to be safeguarded and protected the soberly conceived fundamental law of the land. This must not be made the pawn of prejudice or selfish ignorance.—Christian Science Monitor.

IT HAS BEEN PROVED

The urgent need for reforestation of cut-over timber lands has been proved by the U. S. Forest Service, as the following item from The Outlook shows. That floods can be controlled in part by reforestation, and the fertility of the land retained, are the only conclusions deducible from the experiment which lasted for upwards of 20 years:

The United States Forest Service and the Weather Bureau have just brought to a conclusion an exhaustive experiment begun as long ago as 1909. In the Rio Grande National Forest near Wagon Gap, Colorado, two contiguous forested mountain tracts of two hundred acres each were painstakingly selected, each being closely similar to the other in topography and forest cover. The plan was to observe them carefully and most minutely for a period of years, noting accurately every detail of meteorology, stream flow, and so on, and then to denude one of the areas and continue the measurements as before for another period of years. This has been done, and the results summarized by officials of the Forest Service and the Weather Bureau; the report is published by the "Monthly Weather Review" of the latter bureau. It turned out that after deforestation there was an excess of stream flow from the denuded area of twenty-two to thirty-five per cent, while the load of silt eroded away by the streams increased five to fifteen fold.

Preventing High Blood Pressure

(Oregon State Board of Health)
 High blood pressure is a symptom rather than a disease. It is a reaction that appears after certain changes in the structure and functions of the body have occurred. Unless we can remove the changes that have caused the high blood pressure we might do harm by directly lowering the blood pressure. When the blood pressure begins to rise we do well to enforce general hygienic measures.

Faults of hygiene, infected teeth, tonsils, adenoids or other low grade infections must be corrected. The removal of an infectious focus may be followed by a return of the blood pressure to normal. If the high blood pressure has been long continued and the changes that underlie it have become fixed and inseparable there can be only alleviation, for high blood pressure is only an adaptation of the circulation to certain underlying changes. In the early stages these changes may be removable but later on they become fixed and irremovable. At no stage is it wise to treat the results only and let the cause of the condition stand.

The use of drugs or electrical treatments to reduce high blood pressure direct is inadvisable. Improvement of habits or changing them to suit the changed condition is advisable. Worry, hurry and excesses of all sorts must be eliminated.

A calm quiet life, free from business and social cares is absolutely essential to ensure relief. Relaxation must supplant tension. Sleep must be restful and plentiful. The food must be moderate in amount and simple in character. A minimum amount of meat should be allowed and condiments should be avoided. Focal infection in teeth, tonsils and sinuses should be eradicated.

Avoid high blood pressure by an observance of good personal hygiene and the cultivation of regular habits.

R. A. Easton's Weekly Letter

Governor Dan Moody of Texas, why did you lie down on your job at the Democratic national convention? You surely did, for your words came in by radio when you were referring to the minority report in the committee concerning the prohibition plank and that there would not be any dissension on the floor of the convention over that plank as adopted by the majority in the committee; you said, "I am not in the minority, I am the minority." I ask you, Governor Moody supposing Elijah had lain down on his job on Mount Carmel because he was in the minority and that exhibit of the power of active, abiding faith in the things of righteousness had not been; would Mount Carmel be a landmark in the history of man's endeavor and accomplishments as a place where God and one man made a majority? Or as a place of a hissing reproach, or as a by-word, or as a contempt, a stench in the nostrils of men?

Elijah did not hunt the juniper bush until after the Almighty and he had won the fight on Mount Carmel. Wife and I talked about that and we agreed that you are like Elijah in one particular. Elijah said, "And I, even I only, am left." The Lord said unto Elijah, "I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him."

Governor Moody said, "I am not in the minority, I am the minority."

In that Tammany Hall convention there were several hundred men who had not bowed the knees unto Tammany and whose mouths had not kissed the Tiger harlot. And yet Governor Dan Moody of Texas, as the recognized leader of the fight against the Tammany tiger, perverting the constitution of the United States and the law of the land, said "I am in the minority" and sat down. A man may get knocked down in a fight but when he lies down he is weak-kneed.

If William J. Bryan had been present in that convention, can anyone imagine that the Democratic national convention at Houston would have turned out to be a petting party for the tiger?

Tammany Society, an institution originally organized for charitable purposes in New York City May 12, 1789, deriving its name from a Delaware chieftan who had recently died at the age of above 100 years and who for his reputed virtues was in the latter years of the Revolution facetiously chosen patron saint of the new republic. Secret societies under the auspices of St. Tammany were organized in Philadelphia and other cities; but the institution soon fell into oblivion except in New York where it was soon turned to account as a political lever, and it ultimately became the principal instrument of the managers of the Democratic party in New York City exerting a considerable influence also upon state politics.

This history of Tammany is from Johnson's Encyclopedia published in 1874. A more extended account is given in a late edition of the International Encyclopedia. If you want to learn of the real workings of Tammany, read up on Boss Tweed and his ring and you will find the oil scandal, perjury, thievery are as perfume compared with the workings of Tweed and his gang. A clerk in the office of the auditor who put James O'Brien, an opponent of Tammany, wise as to what was going on in the thieves' paradise, and O'Brien gave the figures to the New York Times and they were published in that paper in July, 1871.

More than 50 years ago I heard Greenville M. Ingleby, of Sandy Hill, N. Y., say, "After Boss Tweed knew the Times had the figures, Tweed went to George Jones, the editor of the Times, and offered Mr. Jones, (if I remember correctly) $5,000,000 if he would not published the news."

George Jones, editor of the New York Times showed Boss William M. Tweed the door and said, "It is possible the devil will never make me a greater offer."

It was after the searchlight of exposition that Tammany made a pretense of being converted but the housecleaners never got to work. The "reorganizers" only attempted to make clean the "outside of the platter."

The Tammany trademark is on Al Smith. Can the Tiger change his stripes?

By radio we heard Wilson's name mentioned in the Republican national convention then we heard the applause for the reason the name of a great man had been mentioned.

Another noticeable thing was that Harding's name was not mentioned. Some things when they are dead are dead.

It is probable that George E. Chamberlain was one of the most able U. S. senators that the Pacific coast or any other part of the country has sent to Washington. I voted for him for governor of Oregon and for U. S. senator. By so doing I know that I served and honored my state.

Lewis Roberts, a former Coos county resident but now Justice of the Peace in Ashland, has to hold a bedside court. After an X-ray was taken of his leg hurt in an auto accident, he was ordered to bed to give the ligaments in his leg a chance to grow in place again. He hands it out to the bootlegger or speed fiend just the same as though he were sitting up straight.

Roosevelt Highway—Few people know that the Roosevelt Highway contains eight miles of road between Newport and the Siletz River which is said to be the most scenic eight miles of highway in the United States. This section of the highway, known as the Otter Crust-Rocky Creek Section of the road, is just becoming known to motorists, and a rapidly increasing tourist travel is motoring along this coast road to see this concentrated eight miles of beautiful scenery. From Astoria to Reedsport, the highway is uncompleted and detours must be made or beach roads used. From Reedsport south to the state lines, the highway is completed and in excellent condition. Ferries in this section cross the Umpqua River, Coos Bay and the Rogue River.

The Dalles-California Highway—Tourist travel has at last found the Dalles-California Highway and a rapidly increased volume of traffic is using this road. The road from the Dalles to Klamath Falls is in excellent condition and is the fastest road in the state, it being possible to maintain the speed limit under all conditions of weather throughout the entire length of the road. This road is almost universally used as one part of a loop trip by the California tourists.

Pacific Highway—Construction work near Dunsmuir in California is carried on so as not to inconvenience traffic along this main coast artery. The road from the Mexican line through California and Oregon is in excellent condition and is carrying the major portion of traffic. Fremont Highway (Bend to Lakeview)—This highway named for the foremost explorer of Oregon, is carrying the largest volume of travel that it has ever been favored with. The road is in good condition, macadam and gravel with just a little dirt. The dirt sections, however, are in good condition and will be maintained in their present condition until the fall rains.

The Redwood Highway—Construction work on the Redwood Highway near Orick has advanced to such a state to offer very little inconvenience to the motorist and the mud of early spring has entirely disappeared. As a consequence, numerous Oregon motorists are driving into California by way of the Pacific Highway and returning by way of the Redwood Highway, making a very wonderful loop with a maximum variety of scenery.

More than two million cars are required annually to replace those worn out and out of operation, the Oregon State Motor Assn' estimates. This means that during 1927, more than one-half of the country's motor vehicle production was for replacement purposes.
