Blotter Plays Part In Making of Popular Song

At Least So Inquiring Foreigner Is Told

New York City.—Music is our best goodwill ambassador.

Fred Waring, band master de luxe says so, and he ought to know. Right now he is playing at the Ambassadeurs in Paris. His popularity is exceeded only by Lindbergh's in that city.

"I find good music can keep people in good humor, better than any other device," he declares. "I think if our bands never stopped playing in war time, there never would be any fighting. I have had peoples from dozens of countries come up and tell me that they can now understand why America is such a happy prosperous country.

Show Interest

"The questions foreigners have asked and the interest shown in American music is amazing. Everyone here wants to know how we write our music. Last night I was playing one of my favorite numbers, 'Say "Yes" Today,' and an Indian rajah came over after I had finished, and wanted to know all about the song. He was interested in knowing how it was written, and, trying to be accommodating, I gave him this yarn.

"The impression left on a blotter used by a worried young man at a writing desk in the lobby of one of the world's largest banks was the inspiration for this song, I explained.

Good Yarn

"The composer, Walter Donaldson, was making out a check at the same desk, and when the young man rose the composer picked up the blotter, which the young man had been using, to blot his check. Across it in large letters were 'Say "Yes" Today.' It was a new blotter and with the aid of a mirror as he held it upside down he read the sentence, 'You said you'd say yes soon, why don't you?' Donaldson liked the rhythm and then and there on the spot wrote the song. He never knew who the young man was, nor if she said yes, but he is making enough royalties out of the song to forget everything else.

"For days after I had told this tale, the banks and hotels were flooded with Indian servants collecting used blotters."
