Putting Pick-Up Unit

Across the Grid Circuit

The phonograph pickup unit is nothing but an inverted loud speaker unit. It transforms mechanical energy into electrical. It does this by mechanically varying the reluctance in the magnetic circuit. As the reluctance is varied according to the record in the groove, the flux in the magnetic circuit is varied. The variation in the flux induces an electro-motive force in the coil wound around the armature.

If the coil around the armature is connected directly into the grid circuit of a tube the entire electromotive force induced in the coil will be impressed on the grid.

If the coil is connected in series with the primary of a transformer the electro-motive force will drive a current through the thus completed circuit. Part of the electro-motive force will be expended in the armature coil and part in the primary of the transformer.

Only that expended in the primary is useful in producing a signal on the tube following the transformer. It is therefore better to connect the pickup unit across the grid circuit.

Screen Grid Tubes Give

Much More Amplification

The screen grid tube is a high amplifier, consequently by using a given number of standard tubes and comparing them with screen grid tubes, altering the circuit to provide high plate load impedances, for screen grid plates, one finds the screen grid tubes give much more amplification. They have been called the greatest advance in radio tubes in five years.

Operating in the other direction, one may reduce the size of the antenna very considerably, when using the screen grid tubes, even down to five feet of wire dangling behind the receiver. The volume may be as great as it was when a long, high outdoor antenna was used with other tubes. Therefore, if one reduces the size of his aerial, and gets the same volume, some wonder whether the extra cost of the screen grid tubes does any more than enable one to reduce antenna size—an extra cost of several dollars, compared with a saving of an old stretch of wire.

Power Tubes Get Hot;

Give Chance to Cool

Radio tubes of the 109 and 201A varieties do not develop much heat, even after they have been in operation for several hours; but power-amplifier bulbs of the 171 and 210 types get quite hot.

Therefore, before touching these latter tubes after they have been in use for more than five minutes, turn them off and give them a chance to cool, otherwise you may acquire a few small but painful blisters. The heat generated by these tubes is a normal part of their operation; it is nothing to worry about.

The same remarks apply to "P" rectifier tubes, only more so, as these tubes handle considerably more power than amplifiers.—Radio News.

Bottle of Liquid Air

Needed in Fan's Shop

Scientists have discovered that a piece of metal cooled to extremely low temperatures becomes almost a perfect conductor. An English experimenter, Alan J. Bremner, has announced to his radio society that when the antenna coil of a set is immersed in liquid air, while the strength of the signal is not increased, the selectivity becomes remarkably high. Soon no DX fan's workshop will be complete without a thermos bottle of liquid air.—Radio News.

Insurance Co. Pays $500
For Frustrated Robbery

An item in last Saturday's Oregonian presents the most garbled story of the attempted bank robbery here, a week before Christmas, yet seen in print.

Nor is the item which forms a basis for the story entirely correct. The National Surety Co., which underwrote the bank's burglary insurance, is paying $500 to the bank for the resistance accorded the bandits and the damage done in the bank. It is not a payment to E. D. Webb, the cashier, but to the bank, although Mr. Webb and Mr. Sanford stopped the attempted hold-up.

It was stated in the Portland daily that this was believed to be the first time in Oregon that an insurance company has paid for a frustrated robbery.

Everyone here knows that the robbers did not enter the bank, and that Mr. Webb did not kill Marion Rube, although his shot probably would have had not the heavy plate glass deflected the bullet.

Brewster Valley

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Benham made a trip to Coquille Saturday.

Mrs. Mulkey and Miss Milky, from Salem, visited the Sitkum school Thursday.

Miss Hattie Bailey, Four-Square evangelist from California, is holding a two weeks' revival meeting at the community building.

Mrs. Churchill returned to her home at Coquille Saturday and Miss O'Connell, of Norway, is working now at the Alford home.

A benefit program is to be given at the Community hall Saturday, Feb. 9th, by the school children and young folks of Brewster Valley, under the direction of our teacher, Miss Parks. The program starts at eight o'clock. After the program supper will be served. Everybody is invited.

Mrs. Irma Harry, of Coquille, visited friends in the valley Monday. Walter Laird, of Coquille, spent Mr. Henness, the Rawleigh man, was in the valley Monday and Tuesday.

Brant Taylor has rented the Julius Benham ranch for three years and he took possession the first of February. We are glad to say that Mildred and Julius are not leaving our midst. They reserved their house and garden and Julius will work in Kenneth Laird's cedar camp.

Ivan Laird has sold his herd of 17 Jerseys to a Mr. Ellis and another party. Ivan will also work in a cedar camp.

Lester Mayse is still on the sick list and James Crowley is helping with the shores.

Call Abe Flewelling, general manager Western Coal Co. at Riverton for high grade domestic and steam coal. Phone 501X. Coquille.
