

Start Them Early!

Nothing will help instill thrift into your youngsters more than to start them out with bank accounts of their own.

You will have to make the deposits at first—but get them interested!

Then as soon as they are old enough to earn a little money of their own, encourage them to put part of it in their savings accounts.

When they grow up they will appreciate the value of money, and realize the helpful influence of a bank book.

An Old-Fashioned Bouquet
Someone brought a gift today,
Just an old-fashioned bouquet;
And how gay and bright it looks
On my table among my books.
And such cheerful colors, too,
Zinnias large of brilliant hue;
Yellow daisies, hearts black as jet,
Dainty aprays of mignonette.
Asters pink, rose, white and blue,
And there are some dahlias, too;
Gladioli with beauty rare;
Red geraniums too are there.

Here and there I find a stock
Of sweet old-fashioned hollyhock.
And oh, how lovely to behold
I see a bunch of marigold;
Here's a ribbon grass, and in between
Rose geranium leaves are seen.
What a symphony in bloom!
How their fragrance fills the room.
Would you make a sad heart gay?
Leave an old-fashioned bouquet.

—Erna E. Hoefs.

At our meeting next Tuesday evening we are going to have some lily bulbs of Mr. Morrison's and their culture and care will be explained to us. It is possible, however, that the fire near his ranch may prevent him bringing the bulbs.

Everyone here in this city should purchase some and show the we are back of home products, especially those which mean so much to our community as bulb growing could be developed into a big industry here.

Another talk will be led by Mr. Taylor. He will name and discuss any bugs or worms we will bring to the meeting.

Everyone is kindly invited to be present.

Hints

Now is the time to plant German iris and the bulbous and English kinds, also peony planting. The peonies appreciate a deeply dug-over soil, well fertilized with bonemeal and leaf-mould if the ground happens to be rather heavy. Remove all dying annuals so the garden will look neat. Keep the faded blossoms cut off and the weeds pulled out.

Make ready for planting of bulbs, such as tulips, daffodils and any spring-flowering bulbs. It will soon be time to sow hardy annuals such as larkspur, nicotiana and calendula.

Keep the cosmos tied if big winds blow. It would be well to see that the winds do not break down the dahlias. Stake and tie them securely, also perennial asters or michaelmas daisies. The annual asters will glory in an application of liquid manure and may prolong the blooming season considerably.

Of course, the chrysanthemums should be tied up to stakes as the sudden winds soon blow the heavy tops over. Even thin out if they are crowded too much. Every sunray now means bigger and better blooms, so be sure they aren't shaded.

More Friendly Rivalry

In an address delivered before the conference on retail distribution in Boston last week, Earl Sams, president of the J. C. Penney Company operating nearly 1400 retail dry goods stores said, "The objective of the chain store manager is, and should be, in the average case, identically the same as that of the independent store manager. If he is in the right job, he looks upon his work as a service to which his community is entitled. And he has a right to expect a reward only in proportion to the service rendered."

"Rivalry has always existed, sometimes friendly, sometimes not so friendly, between and among independent merchants, just as it does between chain stores and independents. This condition will always obtain. I feel that the unfriendly attitude in business is becoming less marked. Men have accepted a broader view of what their business relationships should be. On the whole, they are somewhat less selfish."

"Store-keeping can be made to serve men and women to the mutual advantage of the store-keeper and his customers. The customer contributes the money; the store-keeper contributes knowledge, skill, judgment and the buying ability of an organization so that the customer's money is invested in the most economical manner."

"It would seem that a merchant in any community, regardless of prevailing requirements, should be the servant of his public. And this deduction applies with equal force to both the chain store and the independent retailer."

"Viewed in this light, the relationship that properly should exist between the chain store and the independent store is that relationship which should exist between two men who happen to be engaged in the same kind of business."

"Already a large percentage of the independent merchants are proving to themselves that their early fears of chain stores were groundless."

"Any corporation which might have as its supreme objection, the deliberate annihilation of some other service-rendering business project, deserves to fail, and because of its inability to apply right principles in its operations, little hope for its permanent success need be entertained."

"The successful merchant of the future, whether with a chain store system or operating as an independent merchant, will necessarily be that individual who brings to his community merchandise that it needs, and under the most favorable conditions possible. His conduct, both as a distributor of merchandise and as a citizen in the community, must command that community's confidence and justify its continued patronage."

"The merchant is, in the strictest sense, accountable to his community as a merchandising servant. No community should be expected to support him, to buy his merchandise, unless his operating plan is economical and his buying policies in accord with his community's needs. Certainly, every merchant, whether chain store operator or an independent store, must consider himself a distributor of merchandise. He is an individual whom the community rewards according to services rendered."
