DAIRY
FACTSCLEANLINESS IS
CALF ESSENTIALNothing but Fresh, Pure
Milk and Grain Safe.

How dairy calves may be raised from infancy to breeding age so as to return the greatest possible profit to the owner is the subject of a new and timely extension circular recently prepared by John A. Arey, dairy extension specialist at the North Carolina State college.

Mr. Arey tells how to care for the young calf, how to teach him to drink, how to feed during the various stages of growth, and how to mix and use the various feedstuffs available on the North Carolina farm. It is made clear that cleanliness is essential for success and that this applies to feed, buckets, stalls and bedding. Nothing but fresh, clean milk and grain should be given and the hay should be fed from racks to keep it from getting soiled.

Early dehorning is also advised. Cows with horns often damage each other and especially should all the herd be dehorned if grade animals are used. Because of the attractiveness of well-trained horns, breeders of pure bred dairy cattle usually prefer to let them grow. Mr. Arey describes the caustic soda or potash method of dehorning during the early period of growth.

One of the other interesting and vital parts of the publication is the discussion of common ailments and diseases of calves. Common scours, white scours, lice, ring worm, stomach and lung worms are discussed and suggestions made for control.

Cattle Get Tuberculosis
From People or Poultry

An animal which reacts to the tuberculin test is a potential source of danger, Dr. R. R. Dykstra, 692a of the veterinary division of the Kansas State Agricultural college says. Often times, although the post mortem examination will not show the presence of the disease, it is actually there.

Human beings may carry tuberculous to cattle, as will poultry, Doctor Dykstra explained. A cow which has the avian or poultry tuberculosis is not seriously harmed but the test will nevertheless show the disease to be present.

"This question always comes up," he remarked. "Is the meat of a tubercular animal ever sold? If the case is a light one, the meat will be sold for food, because the germs in this case are isolated in one part of the body and are of no danger, but if the disease is spread through the system, the meat is not sold for human consumption, but is made into tannage. The germs do no harm in the tannage because the steam used in its manufacture kills them."

Clover and Alfalfa Are Excellent for Cattle

In Kansas, white sweet clover hay was compared with alfalfa hay, using 11 cows through three 30-day periods. Little difference in weight was noticed but the cows eating sweet clover consumed somewhat less hay and more grain than those receiving alfalfa hay. The alfalfa-fed cows produced 2.7 per cent more milk and 2.4 per cent more fat than those fed sweet clover.

Either of these two crops makes excellent feed for dairy cattle. In cases where sweet clover fits into the crop system better than alfalfa, sweet clover will undoubtedly prove beneficial. In view of the fact that the soil requirements are practically the same for the two crops, alfalfa is more commonly used than was formerly the case.

STIR CREAM FOR
UNIFORM SAMPLECreamery Man Must Dip
Into Middle of Milk Can.

Have you been dissatisfied with cream test? Did you ever imagine it might be your fault as well as the creamery's? During the cold weather your cream is very thick and full of lumps and chunks. Every creamery receives several such cans daily. In order to give an honest test a uniform sample must be taken from each can. The only way the creamery man can get a uniform sample to make an accurate test is to stir this cream to a smooth consistency. It would take longer to stir this cold cream than to churn it. He, therefore, dives down in the middle of the can and takes his sample for testing. If he took his sample out of the bottom of the can it wouldn't be fair to you, and at the top it wouldn't be fair to the creamery. Now, had you sent this cream to the creamery a smooth velvety consistency without lumps, there would have been no difficulty getting an accurate sample, which means dollars in your pocket.

As soon as the cream is cooled, it is poured into the shipping can or a vessel that holds that amount and the whole stirred, net with a spoon or ladle, as this only stirs the cream around and around in the can without mixing the first cream with the last. But stir with a regular cream stirrer, the kind that creameries use, with a broad lifting surface that will actually bring the bottom cream up and mix it with the top.
