New President Takes Chair

Guests at the Lions Club luncheon yesterday noon, at which the newly elected president, W. V. Ferguson presided, were Sam H. Baker, of Grania Pass, E. G. Marlan, of Portland, and Jack Carter, for 49 years chief of police at Marshfield. Mr. Harlan spoke on the State Chamber of Commerce activities, a more complete report of which appears elsewhere, and Dwight L. Hackett reported on the Lions Camp for boys who would not otherwise have an outing this year. The camp will start July 14, at the former Scout camp on Elk river, about six miles from the highway. The Lions Club will bear the entire expense of conducting the week's outing. $10 of the expense was contributed by W. J. Baker who secured the pot yesterday at his first meeting as a full-fledged Lion.

To Invite Editors to Coos Bay

The Oregon State Editorial Association, which meets in Astoria this month, is to be extended an invitation to meet on Coos Bay in 1932. Next year's session is slated to go to Salem and it is hoped to bring the state's editors down here the next year.

The last session of the association at the Bay was in 1916, and when C. J. Gillette, editor of the Times, suggested that Coos county should entertain the editors at least once in 16 years, his idea was heartily approved by the other newspaper men in the county.

Coquille Trims Another Portland Club 6-2

Sunday's game between the Albina Assassins of Portland and the Coquille Loggers was one of those games which agreeably surprise the fans. Not a very good game was anticipated but the Albina boys put a punch into their stick work and a sparkle to their defense that kept the Loggers on their toes to keep ahead.

The most brilliant play of the game occurred in the eighth inning after two Assassins had been retired. With men on first and second, W. Jogelski drove a grounder at Ray Woodyard who just had time to scoop it up and without stopping to grab it in his right hand, tossed it with both to Stewart at second for a force out. It was major league stuff, and while on the subject of Coquille's 17-year old second baseman it might be remarked that Ray is a better looking prospect right now than "Cutie" Slade was at the same age when he was with Coquille five or six years ago. He makes errors; all ball players do, but he goes after everything within reach and is one of the leading batsmen on the team.

Before Gilie got warmed up Sunday, the visitors were hitting him hard and often, one of them a home run to deep right, but when he began to submerge the Assassins they could do very little with his floaters and hooks and 15 took their three swings and returned to the dugout. Several times, however, Carl's curve was so deceptive that the batter stood flummoxed and had the third strike called. In the third, fourth and fifth innings Gilbert fanned seven, five in succession.

Brundage's homer in the eighth rolled under the score board and the fielder who attempted to return the ball hit the back of the board and then lost it. Brundage could have continued on to second base the second time round had there been any point to such a proceeding.

Carl Tuma looked perfectly natural first-basing for Coquille. He expects to remain here.

Slade a Fixture at Brooklyn

A clipping from the New York Sun sent by "Spike" Leslie, shows that "Cutie" Slade, who played on the Coquille championship baseball club five or six years ago, is making an impressive debut with the Brooklyn National League club this year, his first in the majors:

The Dodgers have had a raft of utility shortstops in the last few years, but not one possessed the skill of Gordon Slade, the dapper young man, who is now substituting for the injured Glenn Wright. In fact, if it were not for the 100 per cent comeback made by Wright this season, Slade would have been the Dodgers' first-string shortstop, and by this time might have firmly established himself as the greatest the team has had in more than a decade.

Of course, when Glenn, as a result of the miraculous operation on his shoulder, showed promise of recovering his old-time form during the course of the training season, he received the call over Slade. Wright improved as he went along, so Slade did not have a chance to break into action. The youngster's status, in so far as remaining with the Dodgers, became doubtful. Two weeks ago reports to the effect that he would be returned to the minors were circulated. Slade, with a natural desire to find out something about his future, made an investigation. He went to officials of the Brooklyn club, and was told not to worry about going back to the minors, that he was to be retained by the Dodgers beyond June 15, the day on which all major league managers must trim their squads down to the player limit of twenty-five men.

With that pleasant information, Slade, or Oskie, as he is known to his teammates, continued to warm a seat on the bench, while Wright went along performing deeds which contributed to the team's success, and amazed even the veteran players who had marveled at his skill when he was with the Pirates a few years ago. Slade settled down to await an emergency call, which, he probably thought, never would come his way.

Slade's opportunity to participate in championship games came without warning. In the seventh inning of last Friday's contest, Wright hurt his right foot in stepping on first base, but thought little of the slight pain he felt, and finished the game as though nothing had happened. The next day, however, Glenn could not rest his weight on his foot. An X-ray revealed he had bruised his ankle bone and would have to remain idle for a few days.

At first the loss of Wright's services, even for a brief period, was regarded as a big blow to the Dodgers. Now, as a result of Slade's splendid work as Glenn's understudy the Dodgers are far from being seriously crippled without their efficient first string shortstop. With Oskie in action the second demonstration that the Brooklyn team has formidable reserve material is being unfolded. The first came recently when Neal Finn made a first rate job of substituting at second base for Jake Flowers.

When Oskie was about to take his turn at bat in the third inning of his first game, he had this to say to 'Empire Jorda, who was officiating behind the plate:

"This is my first time at bat in the big leagues, watch me hit one." Slade swung at one of Bob Smith's fast shoots and hammered the ball into left field for a home run. No doubt, he never will forget his first base hit in fast company.

Engineers Met at Eden Ridge

The Southwestern Oregon association of civil engineers held their last meeting at the Eden Ridge camp of the Coos Bay Logging Co., and as the company's guests, with its chief engineer, J. W. Forester, as director. Those present were the association president, Major Maginnis; secretary, D. L. Buckingham; and Messrs. Bessie, Burton, Forester, Magnuson, Vinton, Stock, Gearhart and Kern.
