J. S. Stockwell, who has made a hit with the ball fans for the past month or six weeks as an umpire, returned Monday evening from Toledo. He likes this country so well he resigned his position on the police force at Toledo and will remain here. Mrs. Stockwell is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. R. Svendsgaard, of Marshfield. Mr. Svendsgaard at one time conducted a second hand store in Coquille.

C. H. Hooton, of Marshfield, Missouri, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, arrived here last evening and will spend the rest of the summer visiting the families of his brothers, M. O. of Coquille, and A. O. of Bridge. They left Missouri three weeks ago, and made the trip leisurely by car, spending a couple of days in Yellowstone. M. O. Hooton had not seen his brother for 40 years last January, when C. H. was but three years of age.

"Is it insured?"

Offered to Excavate Willard St.

A. B. McLeod, who was a guest at the Lions Club luncheon yesterday noon, and who himself was one of those assisting in removing the bottle neck at the west end of First street Monday evening, congratulated the members on their good works in starting this needed improvement. He told of his offer, when the state highway shop was first located here, to put a shovel at work in those parkways and remove the earth to a level six inches below the pavement so that the whole space could be covered with gravel, but the city officials did not seem to be interested at that time.

It might be different now if he would renew his offer.

To Take Advanced Music Course

Mrs. E. A. Woodyard intends leaving next Tuesday for a visit in Portland and Seattle, expecting to be gone the rest of the summer. In Seattle she will do advance studying in both voice and piano under the best instructor in that city, and upon her return will resume her vocal and instrumental classes in September.

Forger and Several Others in Tails of Sheriff's Office

Quite a number of entries appear on the blotter at the sheriff's office for the past week. The largest bond fixed was $2000 for Sylvester G. Wolf, who was bound over to the grand jury for passing worthless checks. His operations covered North Bend, Marshfield, Coquille and Roseburg.

One check he passed was at the jewelry store at the Bay. He claimed he was going to be married and wanted a wedding ring. When the ring arrived he claimed the bride-to-be had backed out and he wanted to renegotiate on the ring purchase. But the jeweler insisted that he take it, so Wolf gave him a $15 check and received $7 in change. When arrested Wolf laughed about that deal, said the jeweler was trying to sting him on a $5 ring and he was getting even in that manner.

Wilma Haines and Blanche Ohman, picked up on the Roosevelt ferry last Sunday with a supply of liquor, are out on $750 bail. The charge against them is transporting.

John Parrish was fined $500 by Justice Bolt at Marshfield, Wednesday, for sale of liquor.

Earl J. Hewitt is serving a 30-day sentence imposed for vagrancy by Justice Maybee at North Bend.

Paul Cowan, Jack Ford and Russell Summers were fined $25 each for drunkenness on the highway.

Eva Sliester, Clyde Wilson and E. V. Heard, arrested in No Man's Land, for sale and possession, appeared in court Wednesday. The woman was fined $200 and the men held in lieu of $500 bail.

J. A. Zachary, of Ten Mile, was arrested last night, charged with possession of liquor before Justice Bolt at Marshfield this morning.

A bad case was that of Frank Parrish, arrested at Powers, Sunday. He was saturated, and all but out, with the stuff he had been imbibing. A bottle makred with skull and cross bones, containing denatured alcohol, and another of limned oil, were found on him. He used the oil to help him get the poison down. He was put in the padded cell but is now slowly recovering his senses.

KEEPING WELL

SKIN DISEASE AMONG PAINTERS

DR. FREDERICK B. GREEN

Author of "HEALTH"

EVERY line of work has its own peculiar advantages and disadvantages. Many occupations have special diseases or afflictions that are, in many ways, connected with the occupation, yet it is often hard to tell just what is the cause or how they are connected with special lines of work. It has long been known that painters were subject to lead poisoning. As this condition causes pain in the stomach, it has been generally called "painter's colic." As another result of lead poisoning is a peculiar paralysis of the muscles of the wrist. This has been called "painter's paralysis" or "painter's wrist drop." This form of poisoning is common in painting shops, wagon and automobile factories and other shops where large quantities of lead paints are used. It has been proven that it is caused largely by painters getting lead into their mouths, by eating lunch with their hands smeared with paint and that it can be prevented by requiring every person working with lead paints to wash his hands carefully after quitting work, by not eating with painty hands and by not eating his lunch in the room in which lead paints are kept or used. The old idea that the poison was absorbed through the skin is entirely incorrect. If the painter can keep lead from getting into his mouth, he is safe from painter's colic and paralysis.

But there is another trouble common among painters, evidently caused by some other substance. This is an eruption on the skin of the hands. In one factory it was found at one time in five employees.

As one boy had not been working in paints but had been cleaning machines with naphtha, the physicians concluded that the irritating substance was not the paint but the fluid in which the paint was dissolved. Experiments on animals, using both the dry paints and the solvents or thinners, showed that it was the turpentine and naphtha which caused the skin irritation and not the paint itself.

The eruption appeared only on the hands and forearms. The skin was dry and red and covered with small blisters, which in some cases run together forming larger ones.

The physician advised the painters to wash the hands and forearms thoroughly after work, using plain soap and warm water and cleaning all the turpentine off the skin and then to dry the skin carefully.

Writes Oregon Tales

ALFRED POWERS

University of Oregon, Eugene. — Carrying delightful and entertaining glimpses of Oregon into all parts of the United States, "Marooned in Crater Lake," a volume of short stories written by Alfred Powers, dean of the extension division of the University of Oregon, is already proving a marked success, according to reports of the publishers, the Metropolitan Press. Orders for the book, which contains six highly interesting tales of this state, are now coming in from all parts of the United States, especially from libraries, some of which are ordering several copies.

Starting with a clever story, "Marooned in Crater Lake," in which a boy, left by accident at an inaccessible point on the lake shore, finally signals the lodge by means of a kite constructed with the aid of postage stamps, the stories take the reader through many adventures and to many absorbing places.

Pioneer Lore Used

Pioneer lore is drawn on for many of the tales, one of the most unusual of which is "The Hickory Bark." This tells of a unique and surprising method of keeping cool, which almost resulted in a widow and her family being left penniless through the death of the husband who failed to reveal the whereabouts of the "bank." In another "The Dinner Call," a pioneer woman foils an Indian by a clever ruse, while the white man's cleverness is again demonstrated in "The Vanquished Rider" in which two boys escape from the Redskins by the simple process of reversing the shoes on a horse.

Almost tragic in a whimsical way is "The Blue Bucket Mine," a story of the Oregon country around old Baker City. A father and son find a nugget in the craw of a chicken and the gold hunt is on. Its termination, minus the fortune, is both humorous and sad.

Stories Interesting

A story that is certain to arouse a real controversy in which even mathematics expertise may take part is "The Fourth of the Far Fifteen," the action of which hinges on whether or not a flame on Mount Shasta could be seen on Mount Hood, 250 miles away. Hood is 11,225 feet high, while Shasta is 14,440, and there is some question as to whether the curvature of the earth would permit vision for this distance between these two lofty points. Interest is added by a scientific explanation by J. W. Booth, who wrote following the appearance of the story in the New Improvement Era in 1925.

WHAT KILLED VAL- ENTINO?

DR. FREDERICK B. GREEN

Author of "HEALTH"

THE illness and death of Rudolph Valentino probably aroused more general interest and newspaper comment than that of any other person in recent years. Probably the only events that can be compared to it in general interest are the deaths of our own martyred Presidents—Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley.

It is just twenty-five years ago since McKinley died in Buffalo. In many ways, there is a close parallel between the two cases from a surgical standpoint. McKinley was shot through the abdomen, the bullet carrying with it the infecting material. Valentino had a perforating ulcer of the stomach, which caused a general peritonitis. Both were operated on, both stood the operation well and, for the first few days, showed marked improvement. It was fully expected that they would both recover. Then after the immediate effects of the operation had passed, a sudden turn for the worse occurred and death resulted in a few days. What happened?

From the statements made by Valentino's surgeons, it appeared that the patient had suffered for a long time with vague symptoms of indigestion, pain and "gas on the stomach." He had done what far too many people do, taken various preparations recommended for "dyspepsia," among them soda, pepsin and other popular remedies for "indigestion." He had been overworking, probably overeating, neglecting his health and probably making no effort to find out exactly what was the matter. In New York he finally broke down, went to a surgeon who sent him at once to the hospital where it was found he had a serious abdominal condition.

Operation showed two perforated ulcers, both of them leaking infected matter into the peritoneal cavity, also an inflamed appendix, just ready to rupture. The ulcers were cut out and the stomach opening closed up. The inflamed appendix was removed, the peritoneal cavity cleaned as thoroughly as possible and the patient put to bed. Evidently, he stood the shock of the operation well and began to improve. But some infection lingered in the abdominal cavity, a general peritonitis developed, then a pleurisy. The poison overcame the patient's ability to resist and he died of septic poisoning.

If Valentino, at the first appearance of anything wrong, had had a careful examination and proper treatment at that time he would be alive today. As to "indigestion" or "dyspepsia," there "ain't no such thing." A stomach that doesn't work right has something wrong with it. Find out what it is before it is too late.

Art Place Awarded

Ellis F. Lawrence, dean of the school of architecture and allied arts at the University of Oregon, who was recently appointed by Governor Norblad as a member of the state board of architect examiners. He succeeds the late Joseph Jacobberger, Portland, and his term will run until May 30, 1934.

As head of the architecture school since 1914, Dean Lawrence has made a name for himself as one of the foremost architects of the Pacific coast. In conjunction with his educational work, he is a member of the firm of Lawrence & Holford, Portland architects, and designers of many of the University buildings, including the new Fine Arts museum, now going up.
