Next Week at the Liberty

Ginger Rogers, the red-headed musical comedy and screen star, is teamed with Joe E. Brown for the second time in his latest First National comedy, "You Said a Mouthful," which is coming to the Liberty Theatre, Sunday for three days.

Miss Rogers, whose beauty and pep, act as an excellent foil to Joe in his character role of an artless but lucky, boob, was his leading lady in "The Tenderfoot." She says her lucky star is in the ascendancy now, for she had sought the opportunity of playing with him for years before being cast in the latter picture. Twice she was selected for other pictures, but something intervened to prevent her taking the part. Miss Rogers declares that she would rather play with Joe E. Brown than any other player of stage or screen.

That they make an excellent team is attested by the many requests the First National Studio had received following their success in "The Tenderfoot," that they be teamed again. The hilarity of the situations which they work out together in "You Said a Mouthful" is said to even surpass those of their previous co-effort. She it is who mistakes him for the swimming champion, and shames him, through his love for her, to enter a marathon race, although he never before has swum a stroke and is in deadly fear of water.

There are said to be more gags and funny situations arising from the race, which takes place in the Pacific off Catalina Island, than in any recent comedy.

Calling cards 100 for $1.50.
