OUT-OF-DOORS STUFF

By Lana Leneve

Time goes not in its flight. In fact it goes too fast. Here another week has rolled around and it is up to me to dash off another issue of Out-of-Doors-Stuff. 'Tis a hot day—hard to concentrate. In fact I envy the four baby ducklings that are sporting about in the water just over the fence. They haven't a care in the world. And here comes a humming bird to dip his bill in the flowers just outside the window. A raven's harsh voice comes from the nearby woods and a buzzard wheels about high in space. Just a sort of lazy day. A darn good day to go fishing, but I can't. Got to entertain you folks, if I can by writing up another issue of this stuff for you. Just glimpsed one of the neighbor's old bulls go lumbering across a nearby field and it gave me an idea. Believe me I was searching for an idea too, for it is no easy matter to pick off this column week in and week out, not to mention the many years it has been going. I have no use for bulls in general and none in particular, but on this particular hot day my heart goes out to the noble animal that loafs across yonder field, inasmuch as it has given me an idea. Fact of the matter is that he somehow reminded me of a buffalo as he lumbered along. And the thought of buffalo brought to my mind some interesting facts concerning this mighty beast of the plains. You all are no doubt familiar with the facts concerning the passing of the great bison from the plains of North America. That is, the fact that he was practically exterminated. But there are many little side issues in the case that you are probably not familiar with. I am going into detail on the subject. From 1860 to 1870 the vast herds of buffalo were estimated to number around five million. In those days these mighty herds of buffalo frequently derailed trains and even obstructed the passage of small river boats on the upper waters of the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. In the year of 1869 the Union Pacific railroad was completed and within a period of ten years this greatest herd of all species of animals of the globe was practically exterminated. The southern herd of the Union Pacific was the first to go. It was attacked by hide hunters and by 1875 with the exception of three small herds had been exterminated. In 1880 the Northern Pacific was completed and the slaughter on the herds in the north was duplicated. All buffalo were slaughtered that roamed the plains by the end of 1888 with the exception of a small herd numbering about three hundred that roamed Yellowstone Park. But not content the poachers sneaked into the park and killed all of these animals but 20. Theodore Roosevelt said, "It may be truthfully said that the sudden and complete extermination of the vast herds of buffalo is without a parallel in historic times."

Despite the fact that an English king has been proven one of the greatest of game hogs and that people of other soils are noted for bloodthirsty killings of game, the writer takes off his hat to one Englishman, in the person of Sir Samuel Baker. In 1881 this SPORTSMAN came to this country to hunt. He killed himself a buffalo, an elk, a deer and one only of each species of big game animals in North America. This hunter had the opportunity to slaughter hundreds of buffalo but he picked one large bull and when it fell his shooting was over for the day. He pulled a bead on the rest of the herd and said "how easy it would be to kill them all." But no other shot was fired. His guide, a cowboy said, "Well, if you came all the way from England to shoot and you won't shoot, you might as well go home." Samuel replied that he derived more pleasure in watching the mighty beasts in their native haunts than he would to shoot them and leave them to rot upon the plains. There was a gesture of sportsmanship, if followed by the hunters of this country, which would have preserved our great herds of bison to this day. One party of New York hunters describes the following fact, dated 1871, "about 50,000 buffalo were killed on the plains of Kansas and Colorado alone. Of this number one-third were shot for their robes, as many more for meat and some 16,000 slaughtered in the name of so-called sport."

Twenty years ago wild buffalo only numbered 34 in the entire Northwest, but today the total is well over 10,000. Well, they are not extinct, but they are a long ways from that once grand figure of five million. The Canadian government is marketing its surplus. Ten mounted heads sold at the St. Louis Fur Sales for from $350 to $1,250 each.

The largest buffalo ever shot was killed by Dr. Hornaday of the Bronx Zoo, who is the greatest living authority on buffalo. It weighed 2,100 pounds. However, a pen raised bull, "Black Dog" which was bred on the government farm in Kansas turned the scale at 2,800 pounds.

"California Fish and Game", issued by the California game commission is responsible for the data gathered for this article and the writer extends his thanks to them.

The world is really a small place after all. About 14 years ago I sent to Ponca, Nebraska, and secured some wild mallard from one William Lister. He wrote me concerning their arrival and I replied. We struck up a correspondence which lasted up until the time of Mr. Lister's death about five years ago. The other evening I was talking to a couple of the C. C. C. boys and inquired if anyone from their outfit was from Ponca. The one addressed replied that he was from there. I asked him if he ever knew William Lister and he informed me that Mr. Lister was his uncle.

Did you ever happen to think of the "Bills" that are handed down to us in history? Take for instance the buffalo hunters that I have been writing about—the killers of vast herds. Here are some of their names: Buffalo Bill, Wild Bill Hickox, California Bill, Rattlesnake Bill, Tiger Bill, Comanche Bill and Apache Bill. 'Pears like there were more "bills" in the olden days than there has been during the depression.

The most remarkable increase of animal life of all time is recorded in Alaska. In 1892 Dr. Shelton Jackson brought from Russia a shipment of reindeer. The United States government followed with shipments from Siberia. A total of 1,280 animals was imported between 1892 and 1902. In 1922 a census showed a total of 250,000 animals. Reindeer meat is now on sale in most large cities and there are several million of them in Alaska at the present time no doubt. I have no figures on the present number but if the census taker "guessed" 250,000 in 1902 there must have been several there so I will take a guess myself that there must be a million or so roaming around that part of the country.

Every time I think of the census taking of wild animals I either have to suppress a smile or laugh out loud. Two hundred and seventy-five fisher in two forest reserves of Oregon says one census taker. "Tain't so" says I. Ain't that many in the state." So what are you going to do about it? It's a joke, pure and simple, this census taking of wild life. I care not how well versed a man may be concerning a country or the wild life in it, he has no idea regarding the number of animals or birds that frequent any particular stretch of country. Thousands and thousands of dollars are spent each year by state game commission and government concerns taking wild life census. When they get through they don't know any more about it than when they started. The Oregon State Game Commission had a man in the field taking wild life census here in southwestern Oregon. How could a man count the deer or even estimate the number of them in this country? It is impossible. If he traversed the thick brush for the rest of his life he would have no more idea of how many birds and deer abounded in this brush taken country than he would have if he remained home and made a wild guess concerning their number here. Why the sportsmen's good money should be spent for such foolish enterprises is beyond me, but it is. When it comes to counting wild life it brings to mind a little incident that occurred last winter. A friend of mine and I were driving along the highway. The bottom land was covered with ducks. We stopped the car and two men who were hiking up the highway stopped by us. I said to my companion, "how many ducks are out there?" He swept his eyes across the marsh and replied "between two and three thousand." I turned to one of the men beside us. "How many do you say?" "H—I", says he "there are ten thousand if there is one duck." "And what do you say?" I asked his companion. "Me, I'm not damn fool enough to try and estimate the number."

So there you are. Conversation with the hikers disclosed the fact that they were both hunters-woodsmen. Both my companion and I were also. There were four of us there (I didn't guess on the ducks) and none of us could agree. So how in the name of common sense in one man going about the country and count all the wild life in it and do it accurately.

It's all a joke—the biggest joke that ever was—this counting wild life and any woodsman that knows wild life will back me up in this statement. But white collared gents who sit behind mahogany desks and read reports of their census takers to their secretaries, who in turn transcribe them and put them out to an unsuspecting public may think differently, but if they do their ignorance on the subject must be blissful indeed.

Empire Mill to Start August 1
Opening of the Simpson mill at Empire on August 1 is definitely assured, according to reports released yesterday by C. McC. Johnson. The mill will work one shift and cut approximately 125,000 feet of fir dimension per day.

Arrangements have been made for marketing the product in California and on the Atlantic coast and prospects are that the mill will operate continuously. A crew of 60 men will be employed.—News.

Sport Briefs

(By Mark Seeley)

To the general baseball public Grover Cleveland Alexander is the "Old Master"—or at least one of them among the many famous stars of the national game who have performed on the mound—but to the baseball public of Coquille Carl Gilbert is the true "Old Master." Carl is the pitcher who for years has unfurled his arm from the box on the diamond. He has hurled with good and bad support behind him, with and without much training, and against good and bad conditions, but in the years that he has performed for the Loggers his performance has usually brought him to the top.

Not only will the fans turn out to see the House of David bearded team and Grover Cleveland Alexander, but they will be there to see just what Gilly will do against these formidable opponents. The odds are, of course, stacked high before him. The Logger team of 1933 is not as fast as some in past years, but give Carl Gilbert a good, warm day tomorrow and faultless support afield and he will have much more than an even chance of winning.

Alexander and the bewhiskered House team together make colorful attraction. During this present barnstorming trip they have met many teams, professional and bush alike. Their victory list is large and the defeats few, this well conditioned nine always performing in heads-up style.

It is too bad that the game had to come on a Saturday, thus forcing many who would like to attend to stay away. Nevertheless, Bill Fortier expects to see the largest turnout of the season at this fray. It starts at two bells, but come earlier and see the pepper game.

Sunday the Loggers are going to Medford, where they will play a league game with the prunepickers of the southern city. In the game here between the clubs Coquille won 6 to 1, but this time Medford is reported to be out for the bacon. Next Sunday the Klamath Falls Pelicans, holders of the only win over Coquille, will play here.

Loggers Win From Ashland

The least said about the baseball game here last Sunday might be the best thing, for all that the Ashland club did in the way of opposition was to take its place on the field and be defeated, 16 to 5.

From the first inning when Roper homed with two men, Fischer and Stewart on the bats, it was apparent that the Loggers were determined to stay on the top of the league. Roper's blow was a long, hard hit line drive between left and center field, the ball rolling to the fence, allowing the ponderous Mr. Perry to easily circle the sacks. After this the Loggers scored two more tallies in the first to take a five-run lead.

The assault continued at intervals throughout the fray, hits, errors, wild pitches, passed balls and whatnot contributing merrily to the local cause. On the other hand the visitors hit listlessly at Gilbert's offerings, finally getting two runs in the sixth before he retired. Murray, his successor, got by untouched in the seventh, but in the eighth, one was scored by Ashland and in the final frame two more.

The Ashland club came to Coquille minus her full strength, and while their exhibition was loose it had more or less interest because of the color of the team. Listed in the lineup were "Chief" McLean, ex-Portland high school basketball star who was a big star in the state tourney two years ago, and Claude Hines, Ashland Normal colored football star, as well as several other Ashland Normal athletes. Summary:

Coquille	16	15	1
Ashland	5	11	8

Batteries: Gibert, Murray and Smith; McLean, Montgomery and Joanis.

The only other result that is known is that of the Klamath Falls-Roseburg fray in which the former club defeated the Umpqua team, 23 to 3.

everywhere where there was need for them.

All through the war they worked, and after the close of hostilities it was found that their work was not done, so many of them continued to care for the maimed and sick soldiers, and for the widows and orphans of those who slept in "low green tents" all over our land.

There were men who were unable to care for their loved ones, and these dependent ones too were looked after by the loyal women.

When Paul Van Der Voort was Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic he called for the societies then in existence to come together, and in 1883 their representatives assembled in Denver, and were organized into the Woman's Relief Corps, and accepted as the auxiliary of the Grand Army of the Republic, and left free to work as suited them.

The Order has grown to magnificent proportions, and today there are upon the rolls nearly 200,000 patriotic women.

The members come from every walk in life, and the best women of the country are proud to wear the little bronze badge, which represents Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty.

The aims and objects of the Woman's Relief Corps are:

To specially aid and assist the Grand Army of the Republic, and to perpetuate the memory of their heroic dead.

To assist such Union veterans as need our help and protection, and to extend needed aid to their widows and orphans. To find them homes and employment, and assure them of sympathy and friends. To cherish and emulate the deeds of our army nurses, and of all loyal women who rendered loving service to our country in her hour of peril.

To maintain true allegiance to the United States of America; to inculcate lessons of patriotism and love of country among our children and in the communities in which we live; and encourage the spread of universal liberty and equal rights to all.

This organization was the first to introduce the salute to the flag in the public schools and to make the observance of Flag Day general, by preparing and carrying out suitable programs.

The flag salute now universally used in the schools is also the Boy Scouts oath: "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands; one nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

The Woman's Relief Corps is an incorporated body and owns much valuable real estate. Anderson Prison Park, formerly owned by the W. R. C., is now owned by the United States government.

The name Relief Corps was first used by a society at Portland, Me., organized by the Post in 1869, under the name of Bosworth Relief Corps No. 1, a society still in existence. The next place we find it used is at Fitchburg, Mass., February, 1879, when the Woman's State Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, was formed.

Results of the past efforts of the Woman's Relief Corps may be summed up in the contributions which the organization has made during the past fifty years:

Expended for relief among the Union Veterans and their dependents	$7,724,987.67
Expended for Nat'l Defense Memorial Day in the South	3,656.45
Civil War Army Nurses	27,824.21
