Name "Jehol" Pronounced "RooHoo" by the Chinese

The name Jehol is composed of two Chinese words. It therefore can be divided into two parts: namely, "Je," meaning hot, and "ho," meaning river. So it is, literally, "Hot river."

For English-speaking purposes, the pronunciation of the first part is almost the same as the French "Je" (a zh sound). But in Chinese, read it as "brook," dropping the sound of "b" and "k." The second part of the word "hook" without the "k." So Jehol can be correctly pronounced as "RooHoo," with accent on the second syllable.

The Peking dialect adds an "er" sound to nearly every noun. Hence, "Roohoer"—Jehol. But outside Peking (or Peiping) it is pronounced as Jeho and RooHoo, without the suffix "er."

Needle History

The earliest needles had no holes in them, and were undoubtedly used more as pins or as awls, to make holes through which the long underground roots of plants or bindweed and leather thongs were passed by hand to serve the purpose of thread. These earliest needles were made of stone, bone or ivory. When the advantage of piercing a hole through the blunt end of these implements was discovered, the first real needle was made. During the Bronze age of history, metal needles came into being and further civilization gradually has resulted in the development of over 250 varieties of needles for sewing alone.

Color of Police Dog

The breed of dog which is often called the German Police dog is really the Alsatian Shepherd dog. The true German Police dog is really either a Dobermann-Pinscher, or a Schnauzer. The Alsatian Shepherd is a fairly large dog, black or brown along the back with lighter-colored fawn or brown markings around the head, legs and belly. The Dobermann-Pinscher is similar in coloring but generally darker, thinner, not so tall, with smooth hair and cropped ears and tail. As with almost every breed of dogs, the Alsatian can be trusted with children with whom he has been brought up.
