To Foreclose Assessment Lien

The suit filed in circuit court this week by the city of Coquille against C. W. Upton and wife, Louis W. and Josie M. Sell, is to foreclose the city's street improvement liens against lots 7 and 8, block 7, of North Addition, at the corner of Tenth and Coulter streets, and to compel the removal of the house back to lot 8 from lot 7, from which it has been moved by Sell.

After paying one assessment, Mr. Upton sold the property to the Sells, March 6, 1930, but as he still retains an equity in it he was of necessity made a party to the suit. The corner lot, without the house, is considered not to be worth the amount of the lien assessed against it.

Another Careless Driver

The other car, which came around a point on the wrong side of the road, was driven by Harold Earls, who had been discharged from the CCC camp at Sitkum and was leaving for his home in Joseph, Ore.

Exhibits a Very Old Letter

Kermit Shaw brought in to the Sentinel a few days ago a letter written by his grandfather to the latter's brother on May 15, 1842. The letter was written in New Jersey and mailed to a town in New York state. It dealt mostly with family matters, but he mentioned having bought two milk cows for $50 for both.

Government postage stamps did not come into use until 1845 and the figure 12½, in what is now the stamp corner, indicated what postage he had to pay. The letter, which is in a good state of preservation, was not enclosed in an envelope but the sheet was folded and sealed.

State Police on Year's Vacation

Sergeant C. C. Williams, whose headquarters are now in Medford, has been granted a year's leave of absence from duty with the state police. He and Mrs. Williams, who were here for a few days, leaving for home Wednesday noon, will leave May 1 for Lake Nebagamon, Wis., where they have a summer home, and where they will spend a good portion of the year. It is on the Brule river, near where Calvin Coolidge established the summer White House during his administration.

KNX Application Approved

We Can't Say "We Didn't Know Any Better"

Next Tuesday, May 1, is "Child Health Day," and the following article by Dorothy Canfield Fisher is especially timely and pertinent at this time:

Science is accused of not caring anything about human welfare. The men in white jackets in laboratories are said to devote themselves to searching out "mere facts," without any selections of those that will help men and women. But any enlargement of our knowledge of what facts are, improves enormously our handling of life. A large part of our mismanagement comes from our not knowing any better.

Take for instance the facts unearthed by science during the last half-century about where diseases come from. Just to know as we do now that disease germs come from water, milk and food not protected from them; just to know that disease germs get a much more dangerous hold on human bodies not fortified by vitality to resist them; these few facts have revolutionized our ways of thought and of action about public health. It has been borne in upon us that health for those we especially cherish depends upon the health of all.

¶ Led by the "mere facts" of scientific research, we go forward about one step to a generation in the battle to keep our children well. We know now, as our grandfathers did not know, that a child sick with typhoid fever in a tenement house across the railroad tracks in "flytown" is a real danger to prettily dressed little boys and girls in fine houses across town, although those children would probably never see or hear of the sick child. The generation after our grandfathers and before ours (our parents) had learned that much, and as a result extended themselves (even though it cost money) to provide good drinking-water, adequate sewers, and inspected milk for all the people of their towns—all things which their parents would have thought mere notional "frills."

We begin to see that just as good drinking-water is not a "frill" but a necessity for everybody's safety, so it is ignorant and backward to call "frills" such health measures as free milk for school children, preventative health inspections, and above all, safe and spacious playgrounds for the free outdoor play that is as necessary to the vitality of children as food itself.

Calling cards 50 for $1.00.
