Peggy's Last Assignment

By DOROTHY DODD

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

IT WAS at one o'clock on Wednesday afternoon that the managing editor of the Review-Journal told Peggy Wilder to "go after" Freddie Dodge. At eleven o'clock Thursday evening Peggy Wilder was pacing up and down under the shadows of the linden trees that lined the driveway into the old Dodge mansion—still "going after" the heroic Freddie.

During the time that had intervened Peggy had caught exactly five glimpses of Freddie, once all but surrounded by a group of friends and relatives at the station, later as he entered the elevator of the Vendome hotel, once the sight of his hat rising above the heads of the mayor and his reception committee.

And all the time Peggy had eaten exactly two ham sandwiches, one soda cracker, four cups of coffee, and had sucked a lollipop offered to her by the young man who was trying to get a "story" for the Star. They had shared the same divan in the Vendome hotel on Wednesday night until the desk clerk had none too politely asked them to get out. And unless Peggy had dozed a little as she sat with the young reporter on the divan she had had no sleep. For a time there had been quite a number of reporters though she was the only girl among them, but one by one they had fallen off. But Peggy had remained on the job, and here she was dragging one small foot after another out under the linden trees that led to the house where Freddie was supposedly slumbering after his heroic achievement.

The facts of the case had, of course, all been duly spangled on the first pages of the Review-Journal and the other papers, but none had been able to get a single line of personal comment from the much-lauded young man—all no doubt because Freddie belonged to one of the exclusive old families who still avoided personal publicity as they would the plague. There had been a coal mine cave-in in the northern part of the state. Twelve miners had been buried alive. Peggy was so drowsy that she could not recall the details—only somehow this young Freddie whose family fortune had been made from the mines had hit upon a scheme of rescuing the men—a bold, hazardous, crazy scheme that offered one chance of success out of a thousand of failure. And to give the scheme a test some one had to make a descent and do something that might bring liberation to the imprisoned miners—and that almost certainly would bring destruction to the one who did it. And Freddie had accomplished the impossible. Peggy now couldn't quite remember what it was he had done. Anyway the miners were safe and so was he.

Peggy Wilder was rehearsing to herself the leading remarks she would make in case by any miracle she did encounter the young hero. She would have to trick him into some sort of personal comment. But Peggy reflected that a girl who had been without sleep as long as she had couldn't expect to get very far. She leaned up against one of the linden trees and opened her bag—tried to get the little vanity case. But the bag seemed incredibly heavy and she couldn't make her fingers lay hold of the vanity case. Then Peggy was just dimly conscious of the fact that the gravel on the driveway was very rough. If she only had a pillow it wouldn't be so bad—and then it didn't even seem to matter about the pillow.

When it occurred to Peggy that she might try to open her eyes and see where she was she decided not make the effort.

"I'm sorry to disturb you," said the young man who appeared to be lifting

Fox Breeders to Meet May 22

Something new is coming to town! On Wednesday evening, May 22, at 7:30 p. m., in the Coquille High School auditorium, J. S. McCorkle, of Kirkland, Washington, will present a talking picture on the new baby in the domestic animal family; interesting history of the development of the fox; information on care and management; newer facts about nutrition. This is an entire 45-minute program told with regular talkie equipment and is shown with still film pictures. It is a graphic presentation of the story of the domestication of the fox. Particular emphasis is given to the unusual contributions of the chemical and biological laboratories toward scientific fox nutrition.

This talkie has been making a tour of the United States with Mr. McCorkle and A. H. Leonard, manager of the fox department of the Purina Mills.

This meeting will be highly educational and a large attendance of fox breeders, as well as dog lovers, is expected. It is hoped that every one will come prepared to question Mr. McCorkle regarding any problems which are vexing them on fox food nutrition.

This meeting is free and all are welcome who wish to attend. It is sponsored through the courtesy of the Coos County Unit of the Oregon State Fox Breeders Assn., with J. W. Ruble as president and Irene G. Hartwell as secretary.

Blanco Lodge to Celebrate

Blanco Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Marshfield, will celebrate the anniversary of its institution on Thursday, June 6. All Masons are invited to attend, according to a letter read at the regular meeting of Chadwick Lodge this week. Supper will be served at seven o'clock.
