Four-Eyed Fish Inhabits

Rivers of South America

Eyesight in fishes generally is excellent, as anglers well know, and it involves many interesting peculiarities. The oddest one, perhaps, belongs to the four-eyed fish, a big minnow—the biggest, in fact, of the minnow family and occasionally reaching the size of a moderate brook trout—which inhabits the rivers of eastern South and Central America. It is a surface-swimmer like its cousin the gambusia, and seems to be quite as comfortable out of water as within it. Thus it spends much of its daily life in the air, scrambling over soft stream banks or on mud-flats where it finds certain insects, various small crustaceans, and bits of carrion to its taste. Whether this habit brought about the double vision the fish possesses; or whether, having such eyes, its ancestor learned to take advantage of the opportunity, are questions for theorists to worry over. At any rate, says a writer in the Montreal Herald, this singularity in structure, making the rather large and protruding eyes doubly useful, enables this fish to swim with its face just out of water, one half of the eye watching whatever may interest or threaten it from above while the other half gives it notice of an enemy beneath the surface.

Trace Origin of Bricks to as Far as 1500 B. C.

Bricklayers boast that our bricks are the first perfectly proportioned bricks in the world, but they are wrong. "The perfect brick" existed at least 1,500 years before Christ, as has been revealed by excavations at Mohenjo-Daro in India, says the Washington Post.

Made by an ancient race which inhabited India long before the Aryans overran the country in 1500 B. C., these bricks were almost exactly like those we use today. The ancients knew how to construct houses of two or more stories with them, too.

Knowing nothing of iron or even bronze, these people made their utensils and implements of copper.

Most surprising of all, however, is the fact this ancient race used the decimal system in their weights and measures. This is proved by the discovery of a beam scale and a pile of stone weights made in multiples of two and five.

Use of Word "Presently"

The use of this adverb in the sense of immediately, at once, is now classed by the dictionary as archaic. That is, the term in this sense is antiquated and though still found, is going out of use in literary English. Formerly, until roughly the end of the seventeenth century, the sense was in general use. Shakespeare wrote ("Two Gentlemen of Verona," act 4, sc. 4): "Go presently and take this ring with thee," meaning immediately, as the context shows. And Fielding unmistakably used it in this sense in "Tom Jones" (1749) in describing a poor woman who "no sooner looked at the sergeant than she presently recognized him." From this earlier use, occurring from the early part of the Fifteenth century, the sense gradually became weakened, probably during the Seventeenth century, to its ordinary modern use of by and by, after a little time, shortly. The use of the word in its earlier sense occurs so rarely nowadays as to befog the reader, to give him a feeling of ambiguity.—Literary Digest.

Paganini's Shoe

Paganini, the famous Italian violinist of the early part of the last century, once met a servant girl, Nicette, whose lover had been drawn in the conscription. They had planned to marry, but had no money with which to pay for a substitute. Learning of her trouble, Paganini fashioned a musical instrument from a wooden shoe, and announced a concert at which he promised to play "alternate selections upon the violin and a shoe." A huge audience responded. The entire proceeds he handed over to Nicette. After paying 1,500 francs for a substitute for her lover, she had several hundred francs left. That their marriage might be speedily and happily consummated, Paganini also gave her the shoe which she was able to sell for a goodly sum.

Great Navigator, Explorers

Abel Janszoon Tasman, 1644-1699, at fifty-six, having achieved recognition as the greatest of Dutch navigators and one of the greatest explorers. But he made some big mistakes. He couldn't find a continent. Sent out in 1642 to explore Australia, he sailed completely around it and never sighted it once! Later, as the significance of his error was realized, geographers knew for the first time that Australia was not a part of the Antarctic continent. No man did more in charting the Pacific's shores and islands. He carried on commerce with Japan for the Dutch more than two centuries before the voyage of Commodore Matthew Perry, who often is credited with opening Japan's ports to other nations.

Use of Italics in Bible

In almost all literature, italics are used for emphasis or to give words a special meaning. But in the Bible they are used merely to designate words that have been added to make complete sense out of the literal translation from the Greek and Hebrew.—Margaret Tinney, Talladega, Alabama, in Collier's Weekly.

Marriageable Age

The marriageable age in most states without consent of parents is twenty-one. A boy and girl under this age may marry in almost any state, but in every state in the Union one or the other or both must have parental consent, and in most states it is both.

Occupation

It is better to be engaged in the most insignificant occupation in the world rather than to look upon half an hour as of no importance.
