The Service Cost Him Nothing

Just an example of the service the Sentinel renders in restoring lost property—besides displaying found articles in its window. On Tuesday Gordon Fleming dropped in to advertise for two lost hounds. Before accepting his adv. or pay for it, the writer advised him to call at the state highway shops. Frank Schram had phoned that the crew working on the highway had picked up a couple of dogs.

Mr. Fleming called at the highway shop, found his dogs and was able to prove ownership, although two claimants for the canines had been previously turned down.

Two Chimney Fires Saturday

The second and third fire alarms last week (they usually come in three) occurred at noon and at five p. m. on Saturday. Both were chimney fires, the first at the former Gardner home on Second street, which is now owned by J. Arthur Berg, and the second at the smaller of the E. G. Opperman houses on Coulter street. Neither resulted in any loss.
