Elbert Bede Says Townsdenites
Are Opposing Power Bills

"Those who favor the Townsend plan are concerned over the state power bill that will be on the November ballot," was a statement made by Elbert Bede while a visitor here Tuesday.

"The reason they are concerned," said Bede, "is because operation of a great power business by the state would take millions of dollars in property off the tax rolls. The loss of this property would mean either that the property remaining would have to bear a higher tax rate or the state would have to look to some other means of raising money. The natural thing would be to adopt the transaction tax upon which Townsdenites are depending to produce money for their old age pensions.

"Another feature that should interest Townsdenites is that if the power venture should prove unsuccessful, millions of dollars would have to come from somewhere to pay the bills. Property can bear no more, so why not the transaction tax?"

"Townsdenites are not the only ones worried. Business generally fears the outcome if millions of state money are turned over for expenditure by a commission of three men elected by popular vote without regard to whether they have experience to qualify them for the job. In fact, the provision that no member of the commission may be an owner of utility stock, makes it probable that commissioners may be picked from those who have never been such a business success as to have any money to invest.

"We already have methods for getting lower rates through cheaper power manufactured by the government, so why risk huge sums of our money in an experiment? Why do we need another commission that would have a host of employees at salaries fixed by the commission?"

"Why not use cheap power, if we can get it, over present distribution systems, with rates fixed by national and state governments?"
