A book had been prepared for all pioneers of 40 years or more residence in Coos county to register but not half of those eligible signed it, the number doing so being 180.

Mr. Watson recommended that the officers secure a historian to accumulate historical facts which will be lost to posterity if that is not done when the present living pioneers have passed away. The Dodge history of Coos county was published in 1896. It was the last and only publication of that nature ever issued for Coos county.

During the open-air picnic dinner where pioneer greeted pioneer whom he had not seen since the similar affair a year ago, the recently organized Coquille Band, under the direction of J. A. Hannon, furnished a splendid program. The band is to be very heartily complimented for the progress and showing it made.

After the viands had been consumed and the tables cleared, Mr. Watson called the meeting to order and named a nominating committee to present names for the association's officers for the coming year. The list as presented was unanimously elected, those chosen being:

President, W. H. Schroeder, of Coquille.
Vice President, J. P. Beyers, Coquille.

Secretary-Treasurer, Mrs. Inez R. Chase, Coquille.

The chairman expressed the association's thanks to those who had made the picnic possible—the city of Coquille, its recorder and park commission, the business men who had contributed to defray expenses, Cliff Yarbrough, of the Cow Bell Dairy, who made the coffee, delivered it to the park and served it, Clyde Gage who did so much of the work the week previous in arranging the program and other details of the day's festivities, to the band for its concert, and to the Townsend club orchestra which furnished music during the program.

Miss Marvel Skeels, a granddaughter of Wm. H. Nosler, delighted the audience with two vocal solos. Her voice, trained in the best conservatories in the United States and further developed by a few years with Italian masters, is one which has captivated eastern audiences, in concert and over radio, and her home people were happy to hear her once again.

Geo. R. Turney was the other vocalist on the program and splendidly did he render the two selections with which he favored the audience.

Little Wilma Drake, whose tap dancing has been enjoyed by Coquille audiences many times, drew gasps of surprise from those who had not previously witnessed her efforts, both for their perfection and for the length of times she continuously danced.

Judge Hugh McLain was introduced by the chairman as personal representative of Gov. Chas. H. Martin and he prefaced his remarks with the statement that the governor had commissioned him to pardon all the past offenses of Coos county's pioneers.

Declaring that Oregon is fortunate in having a man like Martin in the governor's chair the past few years, Judge McLain told approvingly of the governor's idea that 50 per cent of the power to be developed at Bonneville should be used for commercial purposes, and that at least 50 per cent should be used for the benefit of the people of Oregon, securing for them cheaper electricity. Gov. Martin is also fighting for an administering commission of the Bonneville product named from Oregon instead of a Washington-named commission as desired by Walter Pierce. The judge did not mention Mr. Pierce but that eastern Oregon congressman favors as the head of the commission a municipal ownership fanatic from the Puget sound country.

Judge McLain then turned his talk to a lighter vein, and told of how the railroad through Coquille was originally built by R. A. Graham, through Front street. There was opposition to that route through town in the early days of this century and an injunction against it was secured. But Graham interests induced the then sheriff to go on a fishing trip one Sunday, and the track-laying crew laid the line for the two or three blocks on Front street during that Sabbath day. It was some years later that it was moved to its present route on the river bank.

to a lighter vein, and told of how the railroad through Coquille was originally built by R. A. Graham, through Front street. But Graham interests induced the then sheriff to go on a fishing trip one Sunday, and the track-laying crew laid the line for the two or three blocks on Front street during that Sabbath day. It was some years later that it was moved to its present route on the river bank.

The judge was even at an early age interested in politics, and related how in the congressional election between Tongue and Vandenberg that the Henryville precinct, now Delmar, voted 137 for Tongue, the republican, to two votes for the democrat. "They voted boxcars and mules," was the judge's assertion. But in the contest staged to show crookedness, by the defeated candidates, nothing was accomplished and Tongue was given the certificate of election.

The present highway between Coquille and Marshfield was laid out on the same line as the first horse drawn vehicle road between the two towns, and the judge gave that as the reason for the "137 curves in the eighteen miles of roadway by actual count."

L. A. Liljeqvist, who was billed on the program for an "oration," served notice that he would not orate but would simply make a talk. And he then proceeded to give the most profound, thought-provoking and interesting "talk" that has been heard in Coquille for many years.

He urged the association to make plans for collecting and transcribing on paper all the tales, anecdotes and historical information which attaches to every creek, hill, mountain and dale in Coos county; and to do it while the men and women acquainted with this pioneer history are still able to tell the stories. He mentioned Geo. Jackson, of Empire, now well past 70 and born there, who had enthralled him, the speaker, for hours with tales of early Coos county days, stories that should be preserved. "They were more interesting than any fiction," declared Mr. Liljeqvist.

Starting with the pioneer spirit which resulted in the discovery and settlement of America, the speaker traced the course of pioneering from Europe to the Pacific coast which was the last outpost to be pioneered.

Having pioneered the land, he said the people of the United States pioneered in democracy, with the declaration of independence and the constitution of the United States and that it was the duty of the descendants of those pioneers to keep the lamp of America bright before the stygian, Middle Age darkness which envelopes those dictator-cursed countries where Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin and their ilk reign, and where self-government has disappeared in the morass of individualistic ambition.

"The greatest crisis in the United States, since the Civil war, has been successfully passed the past week," was Mr. Liljeqvist's reference to the shelving of the supreme court-packing program, and he went on to hit in no uncertain terms the attempts of politicians and self-seekers in this country to array class against class.

Democracies have men big and able enough to make this great experiment in democracy a continued success after 150 years of pioneering was the speaker's thought, and he declared that the descendants of those pioneers would be able to settle the problem of labor and capital with economic justice to all. "The right of man to work is inviolate and the descendants of our rugged ancestors will prove it."

Taken altogether, Mr. Liljeqvist's "talk" of which only a faint outline has been given, was one of the most masterly condemnations of the unrest which has been precipitated in this country by the immigrants from southern Europe, which it has ever been our pleasure to listen to and many have been his auditors who expressed the wish that it might be printed in full. But it was carried away in the minds of hundreds Sunday, practically all of whom commended and approved its tenor.
