Red Devils Lose First to Bobcats, 28-24

Tuesday night in the Coquille Community Building, the Red Devils lost their opening league game to a strong Myrtle Point five by the score of 28 to 24. The winners opened the scoring in the first period with a rush that brought them seven points before Coquille had scored one. Here the Red Devils "zone" defense began to click and Fuhrman started the offensive drive by caging three shots in a row. Both teams played steady ball in the second period and the scoreboard showed 14 to 10 for Myrtle Point at the half.

Starting the second half the Red and White "zone" grew tighter and the scoring moved slowly with Dequent and Cook scoring for the Wildcats to end the third period at 19 to 17 for Myrtle Point. The last period brought thrills and chills as the lead changed hands and the game grew rougher. Coquille was leading 4 to 22 with two minutes to go, but the Wildcats got possession of the ball and "potted" a couple of shots to take the lead and stall till the final gun.

In the opening game the Coquille "babes" looked good as they downed Myrtle Point's "B" squad 21 to 20.

The Less Said About Lipscomb the Better

The surprise of last night's great wrestling card at the Coquille Community Building was not in the main event between Al Szasz and Jack Lipscomb. What really brought the capacity crowd to its feet and kept it there for a while was the flashy performance turned in by Indian Yaqui Joe, of Sonora, Mexico, and Irish Pat O'Dowdy, of Boston.

Yaqui Joe demonstrated the most powerful legs ever seen on a wrestler appearing in Coquille. The first time he clamped those long legs on O'Dowdy the latter required about five minutes of frantic tugging to release himself. From then on the Bostonian tried to keep away from Yaqui's legs.

O'Dowdy took the first fall of the match after 12 minutes of rip-snorting tussling. He dusted off the Indian's whiskers about six times to get the fall.

There was fire in the Sonora man's coal black eyes when he returned for the second fall. Then the below-the-Rio Grande boy annexed with as neat a piece of strategy as has been seen in this ring. As the Irisher applied a headlock Joe hurled his man into the rope and hooked him with a flying scissors hold as he bounced off of the rope. In the third fall the Indian's powerful legs were again brought into play when he took the deciding tumble after 14 minutes with a flying scissors.

The first and last tumble in 19 minutes and five minutes respectively to win the match. Szasz took the middle fall with his powerful leg clutch hold.

In the prelim Ace Freeman bested Sailor Sutherland in two straight falls.

The next card has been announced for Wednesday, January 19.

Business Men Ask Lenient Parking Law Enforcement

with courtesy tags, requesting a compliance with the city ordinances. J. E. Norton believed that the ordinance should be left as it is, but its enforcement should be accompanied by good judgment and horse sense on the part of the city officers.

H. A. Slack expressed the opinion that the strict enforcement of the parking law and the Saturday night six o'clock closing is driving business away from Coquille that formerly came here.

A. N. Gould objected seriously to giving the outside visitor more parking privileges than were granted local people who pay taxes and have helped make Coquille what it is today.

Everyone present was called upon for his views on the subject and the resulting talks brought out some new and many old ideas for handling traffic problems, but all were of the opinion that people should not be offended—made sore—by having to answer a summons; people from outside Coquille, that is.

Before adjournment Mr. Harrington told that the city council hopes to do to increase parking space in Coquille, the improvement in the center of Willard street, the setting back to the sidewalk lines of the curbs on Hall and Second streets, and the creation of a parking lot back of the Legion headquarters and tennis courts in Myrtle Grove park.

Dr. Milne's suggestion that the city arrange for a free parking lot as near the center of town as possible was another one which may be worked out.

That the council will be influenced in their future consideration of the parking problem by the free expression of opinions given at the chamber of commerce meeting is certain. The councilmen's only desire is to administer the city's affairs as the general public of the city wishes them to.

Two Red Cross First Aid Stations in the Valley

says, the sight of the neat Red Cross signs indicating a first aid station has a psychological effect upon the driver who may be inclined to take chances and set him to thinking why these stations are established, Mr. Haggard said. He also expressed the opinion that eventually all highways in the United States will be lined with such first aid stations, located two or three miles apart.

To train the personnel who will be in charge of such stations a first aid course is to be given in Coquille in the near future. The general public is invited to take this course which will be conducted by a local doctor, and which will be for both men and women.

Anyone wishing further information on the subject can secure it from either Fire Chief Frank Schram or R. L. Stewart.

The First Swallow will tell you...

We've never yet seen an advertiser that didn't have "the greatest product in the world".

Tall claims are easy to make but hard to prove.

It really isn't our place to tell you how good our beer is. Either you like it or you don't and nothing we can say about it, for or against, will tell you nearly as much as the first swallow.

The other day we heard from the purchasing agent of one of the largest wholesale houses in Los Angeles.

He claimed that ours was the finest brew in America. Still, maybe he was wrong.

About the only way you'll ever know is to try a bottle of Hop Gold for yourself and see what you think. Will you do that?

Dear Neighbor

"If I had a sultor like Harry Tate, I can tell you I wouldn't keep him waiting for an answer," Paula Gage announced, sitting there in Mary's little sitting-room drinking tea from one of Mary's yellow glazed cups. "Why, the Tates have all sorts of money and Harry knows everybody."

Mary smiled a little sadly, shrugged her graceful little shoulders, and said nothing. She wanted Paula to understand that she had her reasons for not encouraging Harry, yet she did not want to come out boldly and tell her that Harry had a rival.

"It's all so indefinite and—romantic," Mary said, laying her right hand on her left arm where the letter reposed. "You see I haven't even seen him. He lives in the next apartment, and, of course, he hasn't any money. He works on a paper and does writing at home. I hear his typewriter. And he must have talent because he writes the most wonderful letters."

PAULA expressed her surprise that Mary received letters from this man she had never even seen and Mary gladly explained. Once when Mary had gone away for the week-end, her neighbor had borrowed her Sunday paper which had been left out at her door. She found it the next day all nicely folded with a note addressed "Dear Neighbor," and signed "Neighbor." Then once when he went away for the week-end she had taken the milk that was left in front of his door, and she had written to thank him for it, and now they wrote back and forth almost every day. She even made fudge and left it for him at his door, and he had left her some cakes and once some wild flowers.

"Well, that is romantic," said Paula. "So he sent you some wild flowers and a few cakes, while Harry sends you American beauty roses and five-pound boxes of candy!"

"Harry never sent me roses but once, and the candy was for Christmas. Besides, I'm not so mercenary him. Everything was different now however, she reminded herself, pressing the little note in her sleeve. Harry noticed the sigh and looked annoyed. He felt her preoccupation. She invited him to take one of the most comfortable chairs and then poured tea for him and passed cakes but there was little joy in the ceremony. He asked her whether she would go out to supper with him and take a walk.

"How about it, Mary?" he asked. MARY sighed a little wanly. "I am sorry, Harry," she said with her becoming shrug. "If there's someone else," he said, sullenly, "you might introduce him to me. I can put up a pretty good fight."

"You have no right to talk that way," said Mary. "You know you haven't. You—" But she did not finish for it was then that a rather fateful knock came at the door that gave Mary an opportunity to rush into the little hall.

She opened the door and a tall, rather plain young woman of thirty, stepped in. She held out a large, well-groomed hand. "I'm so glad to meet you, Little Neighbor," she said.

"So—so you're Dear Neighbor," said Mary valiantly. "I'm not quite what you expected to see?" she asked.

"Just exactly," said Mary with a little trilly laugh. After much discussing of plans it was agreed that Mary and Harry should take their walk, while Dear Neighbor went back to her little apartment to make a salad and a batch of muffins, and then they should all have supper together in her wee apartment.

"If there's someone else," Harry said when they had reached the seclusion of the park. "I want to meet him."

"Why, Harry," said Mary, "why Harry, there isn't anyone. If there was, would you care?"

"Don't ask me," said Harry. "Don't you see how I feel?" "If you mean that you want to be engaged to me, I don't think you are saying it very nicely."

"Do I have to say it, Mary?" he asked, putting his arms around her in the darkness. "No," she whispered.

Sportsmanlike Driving—Watch Hill Crests

There is a popular song entitled "One Never Knows." It is apropos of driving at hill crests. One never knows what lies just over the crest. The road may be clear or cars may be piled up in a bad accident. The Sportsmanlike Driver always slows down when approaching a "blind" hill crest.
