W. C. Laird Leave for Maine

Mr. and Mrs. Warren C. Laird left Coos county on Monday, going up to Florence, and expected to leave there yesterday for the northeast corner of the U. S.—Maine. Being used to a 24-hour variation in the thermometer, from a 65 degree minimum to an 82 maximum in the islands, it is the opinion of their friends here that they will find the rigors of a Maine winter rather severe. Mr. Laird hedges by saying that if it gets too cold they will drift down to Florida.

Coos county could stand some of the islands' humidity right now. Mr. Laird says it sometimes reaches 95 over there, which is pretty nearly the saturation point. Compared with the 28 point it reached at Powers last week, Honolulu's atmosphere is close to pure water.
