New Books At Library Reviewed

Among the new books recently is "Free Land," a story of the days when great adventure lay in conquest of the prairies. In the eighties, when Minnesota was well settled and farm- ers prosperous, David Beaton left his home and started off with a pair of thoroughbreds and his young bride to make good his claim of three hun- dred acres of grass land in Dakota. He was nineteen years old and made of bone and muscle. He knew farm- ing and he had a thousand dollars, but he did not know the rigors of Dakota weather and that he was to experience arctic snows, prostrating heat, misery and hunger.

The transcontinental railroads were spreading their tentacles over the country and David's land lay along their prospective route. The story of David's dangerous ad- venture, of his desperate fight against the elements of his struggles to make habitations for his family and his stock is told with such force and such a wealth of detail, that "Free Land" will doubtless be added to the classics of American frontier life. In this story of a stubborn pioneer, the author has surpassed her previous novel, "Let the Hurricane Roar."

Another new book in the non-fic- tion field is "From Hoopskirts to Nudity," by Carrie A. Hall, whose intimate knowledge of fashions was gained from fifty years spent in de- signing and making more than twenty thousand dresses. The theme of the book is that Fashion, long the most inexplicable of world traditions, has meaning and direction. The rising skirt level, the redoubtable bustle, the gracious hoopskirt, the mannish tailored suit, and the present trend toward nudity are represented as manifestations of a national spirit that is ever changing.

Written in the author's fresh and facile style, this book on fashion will long remain a definitive work.

Jones had failed to pay his room rent and when he found the door pad- locked, he followed the proprietor around for hours. When the latter, a smaller man, finally turned on Jones he gave him so thorough a dressing down that Jones sent for him to find what he hit him with. The rooming house man showed him a badly swollen fist.
