Homemakers Camp at Clewox Aug. 2-7

including a light weight mattress, flashlight, two cups, one gallon bucket, two plates, one saucer, one sauce dish, one knife and fork, and two spoons. It is also desirable but not necessary to have a camp chair, a camera, pencil and notebook, mirror and pillows and some musical instrument.

Mrs. Olive Eicher, who is to be leader of a bird study group at camp, requests that as many women as possible bring field glasses.

Candlemaking of sprays, etc., as well as quilting, which is a useful craft of a photographic nature, will be available at a few cents' cost to cover cost of materials.

Mrs. Jessie Ingram, former home demonstration agent in Coos county, will direct the evening campfire program activities. Mrs. George Larson is going to lead wild flower walks and Mrs. W. K. Brownlow has charge of an astronomy group.

Games and sports, such as tether ball, archery, puzzles, etc., will be provided and a fine camp library will also be available to all campers.

An excellent cook with her assistants will prepare and serve all meals for this is a rest camp and no work is done during the day.

Sharpen up the can openers, family, and send your homemaker to camp as it is time to enroll.

Any further information and registration cards may be obtained from Miss Julia M. Bennett, county home demonstration agent, Coquille, Oregon.

Oregon Export Trade

[This is the eighth in a series of articles on studies of Oregon's export trade, presented by the Portland Chamber of Commerce.]

Just as geographical position enables Atlantic seaboard cities to dominate export trade to continental Europe, so does it afford ports on the Pacific Coast an advantage in the growing commerce with the Orient, the Philippines, Hawaii, the west coasts of Africa and South America. It is a commerce still in its infancy but with a possible limit of development so stupendous as to stagger the imagination.

China's four hundred millions are undergoing nothing less than a transformation. Their centuries old isolation is being largely overcome by foreign trade and the outcome—there will emerge a people fully conscious of the needs and the luxuries of a civilization with which a majority of them have hitherto had no acquaintance. They offer a potential market for control of which other nations will eagerly struggle.

Japan, too, already an important trade neighbor, will require more and more of the products of which the Pacific Northwest has an exportable surplus. The needs of the Filipinos will increase as they more nearly approach the American standard of living. The west coasts of Africa and South America are also becoming profitable interchange of goods—in fact, all the countries beyond the Pacific and the islands between are logical markets for all that Oregon and the Northwest have to sell.

Fully half of the 65,000,000 bushels of wheat that is grown in territory tributary to the Columbia finds its way to the sea either in bulk or in the form of mill products, and not only must this export market be retained but it must be further developed to receive the additional millions of bushels certain to be added as a result of large and continued migration to Oregon from the central west. In the country immediately tributary to the Columbia River there are now more than 2,000,000 persons. There is every reasonable prospect that the number will be doubled within the next decade. The products of their labor and skill will still further increase the volume of exportable goods and at the same time they will create an expanding market for the articles of foreign origin brought by ships from across the sea.

Also, in the Columbia River territory the timber stand is estimated as the equivalent of 500,000,000 cargo tons, and half of it will be moved by water a substantial part entering export trade. A wider market for the products of Oregon lumber mills is a matter of personal concern to every resident of the state.

Refinements in the refrigerating process by which fruit and vegetables are made to retain their natural color and flavor, are providing Oregon with another source of revenue and an unpredictable quantity of highly desirable export goods. Fruits and vegetables by the thousands of tons, grown in Oregon, are now being processed by Oregon plants and in steadily increasing amounts are entering world markets. It is not unrealistic that the exportable surplus from Oregon canneries and refrigerating plants shall one day exceed the lumber industry as a producer of wealth.

On the principles of sound business and good neighborliness Oregon is building an export trade structure of magnificent proportions.

Minter On Labor Situation Here

the men want not a labor union that is definitely and positively dominated by the Communist party.

I am not taking the position that I do as a labor leader or politician, but as a man that is interested in the welfare of the community in which he lives. As I have said previously, the machinery that the CIO would use as a labor leader or politician, to fight a deliberately planned political move to force a certain labor organization on the people of the United States. The people of Coquille were unfortunate enough to have a good-sized industry and therefore they were forced to take what has been handed out by an alien-led group of radical-minded, irresponsible men.

The working man, as always is the case in labor disputes, is left holding the bag. CIO boys as well as the A. F. of L. have had to pay the expense of the fight for dominance of organized labor. Should the CIO be granted the bargaining power here it would not solve the problem by any means. The Carpenters and Joiners would immediately place a boycott on Smith Wood merchandise whether the local union wanted it or not. This is not a fight between local CIO and A. F. of L., it is a fight between two powerful rivals and we locally are caught in the light of the line. The CIO have the administration behind them, but the man that wants to work under good conditions, no matter what his union affiliation may be, has public sentiment behind him. The present administration will not go on forever.

All we want in the Plywood is to be left alone, and if we are not left alone we are going to tell the world just what sort of underhanded means are being used to foment trouble. If the NLRB would play the game according to the rules we would not have to put up with all the nonsense that is going on.

H. A. Minter.

Matters in Probate Court

The people of the community were shocked to hear of the sudden and unexpected death of Grant Doney, who died Monday of a hemorrhage at his home on Big Creek, where he lived alone. His lifeless body was discovered by a neighbor, Red Henshaw. Grant was a well respected man, kind, and always ready to grant a favor. He will be missed by his friends and neighbors. The sympathy of the community goes out to his brother, Roy, and family.

The John F. Duncley family is moving this week to Coquille, where they have purchased a lot and are going to build a home.

Thirteen From Coquille

Attended Fir Point Camp

The Fir Point Christian Service Camp of the Churches of Christ of southern Oregon, was attended by thirteen young folks of the local church. The school and camp was from July 18 to 23 and ninety-two were enrolled, with twenty adults present as faculty members. The total attendance was 120.

This was the fourth year of the camp and two of the Coquille young people, Donald Bailey and Patricia Mosler, attended for the fourth time and were graduated from the school. The others attending were Yvonne Kern, Dorothy and Marjorie Hardenbrook, Lois Morgan, Marvin Myers, Elizabeth Hooton, Leonard Farr, Charles Mulkey, Jack Towne, Junior Stem and Danny Cardwell.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Adrian Sias were instructors in the school. Those going to furnish transportation for the Coquille contingent were Mrs. C. C. Farr, Mrs. Clifford Kern and A. L. Hooton.

A Marked Difference

PARAMOUNT

In rendering "the final service" it is our object to ever raise its standards of helpfulness and degree of perfection. Time, experience and conscientious interest are the essentials — and the only ones of which we know — to this end. Funeral Direction of paramount standards, is our promise.
