Politics in Agriculture

By WALTER E. SPAHR
Professor of Economics, New York University

Secretary Wallace has announced that he hopes to perfect a plan to subsidize the export of about 100,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat during the current year. The money for this subsidy would come from one-third of customs receipts that are earmarked for this purpose by the AAA legislation of 1933. The nature of this program is worth pondering. The purpose is to use receipts from wheat exports to subsidize our own wheat exports so that our wheat exporters can sell to foreigners at low prices and to our own domestic buyers at higher prices. In other words, money is to be collected from importers so that consumers can be charged higher prices. The program is the foreign buyers and domestic producers. Or, if it is granted that there is no reason why we should encourage domestic production for foreigners at a price more favorable than that charged our buyers, then the Wallace program resolves itself into subsidizing our wheat growers at the expense of our domestic buyers and importers.

This method of subsidizing one group at the expense of others raises a question of economic policy with which we are apparently unwilling to deal sensibly or fundamentally. Instead, we as a nation, are subsidizing various groups and are using this policy to gloss over economic problems that we do not face properly, and to serve political ends. The principle of subsidizing certain groups of producers at the expense of others should be squarely faced by the American people. When, if at all, is a subsidy justified? Is there any good reason why we should subsidize people who overproduce in certain lines, or who produce at costs which are too high, or who export to uncontrollable and unpredictable fluctuations of weather or of prices in world markets? And if we subsidize such producers, will we not encourage more of these producers to increase their output still further and at a still greater cost so that more subsidy will be needed?

One may justify subsidizing certain groups of producers in certain circumstances, but it seems impossible to find defensible reasons for subsidizing groups that overproduce or cannot compete effectively in world markets in peace times and when matters of national defense are not involved. Once we open the way to subsidizing people who are inefficient, or who have had judgment, or who suffer misfortunes from the unpredictable or uncontrollable, then there is no logical end to the uses to which subsidies may be put.

If people wish to protect themselves against the uncertainties of life, it is supposed that they will take out insurance, or hedge, or diversify risks. But it is also assumed that they themselves will pay for these methods of reducing their risks; it is not assumed that others should pay these bills. Prices, resulting from free and fair competition, are the best guides known to producers and consumers; they also serve humanity best in accommodating production to its needs. Subsidies interfere with the free interplay of the forces of supply and demand. They mislead and distort; they create maladjustments that will require more severe readjustments later.

We subsidized wheat growers, through price fixing, during the World War. The readjustments, which farmers have been compelled to face since, have been very severe. The value of farms fell sharply, heavy mortgages on high-priced farms were wiped out, bankruptcies among farmers, and the consequent suffering has continued to this day. Subsidies may prove to be political assets for a short time, but they are nothing fundamentally, and they tend to pile up trouble for the future. Rushing from one subsidy to another in agriculture shows the sad state of affairs into which our government's agricultural program has fallen. The program is a matter of politics, not economics. Just how long we can continue to play politics with such problems is, of course, debatable. But it seems clear that in time the economics of the issue will have to be faced, and then the present mess of opportunistic, political subsidizing will have to be cleaned up.

If economic principles have the value that economists think they have, then we are destined to face clean-up along a broad front in the not too distant future for the simple reason that we have been piling one expedient on another until the economic and political structure cannot much longer carry the load. When this house of cards, based upon temporary, political expediency, borrowing, spending, lending, and subsidizing, collapses, what then? Now is the time to give some thought to this question.
