Totem Poles Being Preserved

THE totem pole, in Alaska and in British Columbia, is the symbol of achievement among the families of Pacific Coast Indians. The art of carving and painting, with native dyes, these picturesque monuments to valor and legend, now is known to so few of the older members of the Coast tribes that both the United States and Canadian governments have taken steps to preserve all authentic totem poles. The photograph, left, shows an unusual totem near Ketchikan. Many other attractive and unusual totem poles are seen in Prince Rupert, Sitka, Wrangell and Skagway, on the sheltered "Inside Passage" steamship route from Vancouver.

Some of the finest examples of totem pole art on the continent are seen at Ketchikan (photo of totem group) and other Indian villages along the Jasper-Prince Rupert branch of Canadian National Railway in British Columbia, while one of the best preserved totem specimens in North America lends atmosphere at the railway station in Jasper National Park, Alta. This beautiful Haida Raven totem pole (right) was brought to Jasper from the Queen Charlotte Islands.

ANNOUNCER STREAMLINED

Don Wilson, Jack Benny's Falstaffian announcer, has at last found a belt that lets him discard his famous suspenders. The secret is that the belt, made of the new "Vinylite" plastic, stretches comfortably—but never too much. Four feet of it—48 inches—were needed to get around Don's middle. Benny (left) apparently is taking no chances that the Wilson trousers may slip.
