Nothing happens until nightfall, Pacific northwest. young men from the armed forces are reinforced to 20 or 30. Hundreds of civilian spectators gravitate to Lafayette park, across the street, and wait. The pickets say nothing, conlinue their march, the light in the lantern gleaming. Police move a little closer to the pickets. With a sudden ruch the sailors, marines and soldiers swarm upon the pickets, delivering as many blows as possible before the police, reinforced by secret service men from the White House, break up the brawl. The lantern may be smashed, the girl pickets shoved roughly around, the man or two in the picket line receive a cut face, black eyes.

Then all is quiet, the crowd leaves and the picket line continues as before, with possibly a soldier, marine or sailor landed in the guardhouse of the White House. The nightly fracas has become routine, but the pickets are hogs for punishment. These marchers are said to be Communists and some of them are, but the police interfere only when the marchers
