To Crack Down On Willful Selective Service Delinquents

Start of a campaign to locate for compliance or prosecution all Oregon registrants listed by local boards as delinquents was announced by Colonel Elmer V. Wooton, state director of Selective Service, following a conference with United States District Attorney Carl C. Donagh and representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Willful violators of the Selective Training and Service Act can expect speedy prosecution and stringent penalties, United States District Attorney Donagh has assured the state director. Maximum penalty under the act is five years in prison or $10,000 fine, or both.

Although willful violators of the act can expect no leniency, Colonel Wooton indicated that registrants who had become delinquent only through unintentional neglect to notify local boards of change of address or other unintentional minor infractions of the law would receive less stringent treatment.

"Any person who voluntarily reports to his local board during the month of January, 1943, and whose delinquency was not willful is likely to be given a chance to comply with his obligations and not be prosecuted," Colonel Wooton said. "In the event such persons have been listed by the local board as delinquents but not yet reported to the United States District Attorney, the decision will rest with the local board. Decision as to the prosecution of registrants reported to the United States District Attorney as delinquents will rest with the United States District Attorney, although the local board is authorized to make recommendations.

Colonel Wooton stated that assistance of newspapers and radio had been enlisted in the hopes of locating many registrants now listed as delinquent but whose delinquency was probably unintentional and consisted chiefly of forgetting to report a change of address to local boards. Only by immediately contacting local boards can registrants suspected of delinquency hope to clear themselves, he pointed out.

Notices of delinquency have been sent to 3,467 Oregon registrants since the beginning of Selective Service operations, but 1515 of this number cleared themselves with local boards without being reported to the United States District Attorney. The balance includes 752 registrants listed as delinquent but not yet reported to the United States District Attorney and 1,200 who were reported to that official. Of the 1,200 reported to the United States District Attorney, 709 were either cleared or prosecuted and 491 cases are pending.

Beginning February 1, delinquent registrants can expect law enforcement officers to "crack down hard" it was indicated by Colonel Wooton. "In time of war even unintentional shirking of a prime duty of citizenship is reprehensible, and a deliberate attempt to evade service for the nation cannot be condoned," Colonel Wooton declared.

It was also intimated that registrants could expect increased activity upon the part of law enforcement officers to investigate persons between 18 and 65 who failed to carry registration certificates. Persons 18 to 45 must not only carry with them the registration certificate but also a notice of classification if they have been registered for six months or more.

In connection with the new requirement that a registrant have notice of classification in his possession, Colonel Wooton urged registrants between 18 and 45 to obtain duplicate classification notices from local boards if the originals have been lost. All registrants have been classified with the exception of the 18-year olds who registered during the latter part of December.
