Out-of-Doors Stuff

by LANS LENEVE

After long association with game animals and birds, after pursuing and slaying them for years and years, it is a known fact that the average sportsman grows to love the game animals and birds that he pursues. He derives more pleasure in the actual pursuit than he does the kill. The anticipation of the hunt, the actual stalking of the game, or birds, gives more satisfaction than the actual slaying of the game stalked.

It is worth a lot to a man to fare forth into the jungles far from civilization, to sit beside a campfire, to relax next to the bosom of old Mother Nature—to list' to the winds whispering through the tree-tops, or to huddle in the blind in the stormy marshlands waiting for the duck to come wheeling over his decoys.

The sound of the wind, the sound of whistling wings over head mean a lot to the sportsman. And there are few amongst us, when we wend our way homeward from the marshlands, or come from out the jungles, whether we have the limit or come home empty handed, who does not feel that his hunt has not been in vain. It sort of cleans a man's soul to get out in the big woods, in the pure, clean air, or in the rain-drenched marshlands.

The woods, the marshlands, the yellowing fields of October, all hold an allure—something hard to explain, but it is there. It enters a man's soul—steps up his pulse and takes him apart from the world of everyday life and it is something that he looks forward to each fall. It is really the call of the woods, the streams, the marshes and something apart from anything else.

From the time the rifle is laid away in the fall and the scatter gun stored at the end of duck season; from the time the fly rod is cased, that spark of wanderlust continues to burn brightly in the breast of a sportsman and he longs and dreams of the return of the hunting and fishing season.

A lot of sportsmen actually grow tenderhearted. They do not derive the thrill from the kill that they did in years past. And I know a lot of hunters who would not be guilty of beheading the pet rooster for a Sunday dinner.

Just before last Christmas we were served a shining example of such a case—or along that line. A hunter, whose wife was fond of tame duck ordered a couple of tame ducks from a neighbor of ours. The ducks were delivered here at the store for him. He called for them that evening. On of the birds stuck its head from the box and quacked softly, bright eyes frightened. The man looked at it and said, "Darned if I know whether I'll be able to kill you or not, old sport."

A few days later I gleaned the information from a neighbor of his that the ducks were still alive and Christmas was past. It appeared that one of the ducks deposited an egg in the crate, as the man was taking them home and he talked his wife out of her duck dinner, stating that they shouldn't kill laying ducks at the present price of eggs. Incidentally, his wife could not distinguish the difference between a drake and a hen, so the pair of ducks still frequent his yard and they had chicken for Christmas dinner. Sort of warms a man's heart toward such a man, doesn't it?

Dr. Stem Named Legion Commander

The regular meeting of Coquille Post was held at 8:15 Monday evening with a light attendance.

The Post will participate in the July 4th celebration on the 3d, 4th and 5th, here in Coquille, and its parade entry will be an awkward squad commanded by Frank Martin.

The following members were elected to fill the offices of the post for the year 1943-1944: Commander, Dr. C. G. Stem; first vice commander, Amzy Mintonoye; second vice, Clarence Knupp; Adjutant, Roy C. Morley; executive committee, Frank Martin, George E. Oerding and Geo. Ransom.

It was voted that the Commander be vested with the power to appoint delegates to the convention, and they will go to the convention uninstruced.

It was moved, seconded and carried that the meetings be suspended until September and that the commander shall call a special meeting in case of emergency.

The Post will not sponsor a candidate for Queen or Victory girl.

During the month of July another gigantic phonograph record campaign will be waged and everyone is requested to bring all old records to the drug stores where they will be picked up.

By Roy C. Morley, Adjutant.
