Army Air Corps Has Urgent Need For Recruits Between Ages of 17 and 26

An important army air corps program to recruit more men for the aviation cadet training program was given the official backing of Gov. Earl Snell in a conference with Major Eric K. Shilling, who is on a special mission in Oregon to stimulate cadet recruiting. Major Shilling, will head an aviation cadet examining board that will visit Coquille on Friday, July 30, and Bandon on Saturday, July 31.

Gov. Snell urged that Oregonians give their utmost cooperation in insuring the success of this program.

There is an urgent need for young men between the ages of 17 and 26 years to apply for enlistment in the army air corps, it was emphasized by Major Shilling. The heavy production of airplanes and the increased role of air power of our offensive warfare have brought on this new demand for more aviators, revealed Major Shilling.

This unusual opportunity to sign for air crew training is offered to two groups. Qualified 17-year-olds may enlist in the army air corps enlisted reserve. Upon their enrollment they will be presented with official aviation cadet "Silver Wings," which will be worn on their civilian clothes to indicate that they are future flying soldiers. These men will not be called until after their 18th birthday. They may continue with their civilian employment or education until such time as they are called for training.

Men from 18 to 26, inclusive, who are of draft age, may take the cadet examinations and if found qualified will be authorized to volunteer for induction into the air corps. To be eligible for this program, the applicant must not have received his orders to report for induction from his selective service board.

Those interested in obtaining more complete information on the aviation cadet program and the forthcoming visit of the traveling board should contact David Rackleff, local aviation cadet procurement chairman.
