Hospitalization Plan For Coos Farmers

Farmers of Coos and Curry counties are shortly to have the opportunity of considering a pre-payment plan of hospitalization for themselves and their families, according to word received here from Henry Gustafson, executive committee member of the Oregon State Grange. Recognizing the shortage of doctors, the United States Department of Agriculture through the Farm Security Administration is promoting a federal program of rural health protection. It is being organized locally by Leonard W. Rice, County FSA Supervisor at Coquille.

Mrs. Sara H. Wertz, Field FSA Supervisor, arrived in the Coquille office last Thursday to assist in the organization of a local association and to aid in securing the necessary membership. At least 150 families are required in perfecting a Coos-Curry association.

Any farm family who lives on a farm and derives livelihood from the farm is eligible for membership. Twenty-one days of hospital service for each member of the entire family is provided through an annual payment of $12 a year.

"The United States Department of Agriculture is promoting similar programs in each of the 48 States. In Oregon, the FSA is the field agency designated to promote the program. Oregon State Grange is sponsoring the movement in Oregon," Mrs. Wertz stated. "Last year the loss of work due to illness and accident, if measured in food productivity, caused a loss of ten bushels of corn, 313 pounds of pork, and 14 bushels of wheat per person. A program that will sustain and improve health will help win the war because well people can do more, are mentally and spiritually alert, and can meet and come through a crisis. The necessity for improved services to health has been felt for some time in rural communities. It is now becomes more urgent since the shortage of doctors exists in more than 100,000 American rural communities," according to Mrs. Wertz.

Mrs. Wertz has organized more than 200 farm families in Josephine county where she has been working for the past six weeks. Her stay in Coos county is dependent upon the reaction of farm families to the plan. A local board of directors will soon be selected to carry on the plans.
