Nephew Of Mrs. Geo. Howe Cited

Geo. B. Howe, Standard Oil Co. manager here, hands us the following from a Tacoma paper, which gave an interesting account of the experiences of Red Jordan, nephew of Mrs. Howe, who braved freezing and death in Alaskan waters to save a guardsman at Cape St. Elias light station:

When one of the guardsman at the station was injured severely a radio appeal to a navy base was answered by Pilot Lt. (jg) Warren Bellachey of Berkeley, Calif., who brought Capt. George Goldstein, M. C., an army medical officer.

Despite rough seas and jagged rocks the pilot brought his seaplane down and a dory was sent out from the station for Capt. Goldstein. The pilot asked for volunteers to aid him in getting his ship to safety, and Guardsman Ned Jordan took on the job of acting as ballast while the pilot attempted to taxi the plane to the beach.

Jordan climbed out on the wing tip to balance the force of the wind and hugged it for dear life, while the pilot tried for the beach again and again in the darkness. For two hours he battled with the wind and the rough sea while Jordan clung to the exposed position. A safe landing was finally sighted and Jordan climbed back into the plane, but it was two hours later before they brought the plane in.

Jumping from the ship into the icy water, Jordan secured the plane and for the rest of the night the two men huddled together, both suffering from exposure. The water calmed near noon the next day and the pilot took off with Jordan, arriving safely at the navy base, while other planes were out searching for them.

The first words of the pilot on splashing through the water to the beach were, "Get Jordan to the hospital." Both men received hospital treatment but suffered no ill effects.

Out-of-Doors Stuff
by LANS LENEVE

Each year sees a change in the models of different automobiles, new designs in motors, clothes, etc. Comparing an automobile that was manufactured twenty-five years ago to a 1943 model, with the exception of having four tires, the old model doesn't even resemble an automobile. However it is different with shotguns and rifles. While great progress has been made in the manufacture of ammunition during the past fifty years, the general lines of firearms have not changed to any great extent. Take for instance the Parker shotgun, one of the most expensive and greatest shooting guns on the market. Its lines are practically the same today as they were fifty years ago. The only difference being that the Parker of today is of lighter weight. And the same may be said of the L. C. Smith shotgun. Even to weight this gun is the same in every respect to the model of forty years ago.

Very little change has been made in the Winchester repeating rifle. And aside from the block in the action and a different composition barrel, they are exactly the same in every respect to the model of fifty years ago.

Most everything on the market has changed—typewriters, sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, motors, automobile tires, etc., but firearms in the most popular models remain practically the same and it seems strange indeed that they should remain so—that the first, or among the first models patented years ago, should have proven masterpieces in the art of gunsmithing.

The old Parker shotgun that my dad still often uses (a nine pound gun) is built along the same lines and pattern as the latest Parker today, and it has seen service for over fifty years. During all that long period it has functioned perfectly and not one dime has ever been spent upon it for repairs. And the old L. C. Smith that the writer has shot over a period of thirty-five years is exactly a duplicate of the latest field grade model put out by that concern today.

It certainly is a lot of sport catching a royal Chinook and many anglers travel far to do so. Besides the thrill in landing one, when one is caught it means meat in the pot, so to speak. A big Chinook canned will last an ordinary family through a winter. Besides the price of salmon, when purchased at a dealer's is something to consider. We are wondering why the OPA has never investigated the salmon market and put a reasonable price on salmon. Groceries are curbed with ceiling prices, allowing a very small profit and pastry comes under the same heading. And yet the commercial fishermen on the Coquille river, at the date of this writing are receiving thirteen and one half cents a pound for their salmon, and this same salmon is sold the public over the dealer's counter at 55 cents per pound. Taking into consideration the dressing and cutting up of the fish and giving a margin for waste that may occur in the dressing process, it is being very conservative, we believe, to state that the dealer is making at least three hundred per cent profit on salmon steaks. Ye gods!—no wonder the poor angler hies himself for the river and streams in order to catch his canning salmon!

Coos County School Census

The school census as of October 25 as taken by the several clerks in Coos county, with the elimination of Marshfield and North Bend, is 5051. These two cities elected to follow a law which has recently been placed on the statutes allowing districts of the first classes to take the census once in a maximum period of five years. The number on the census for these above mentioned districts as will be needed in the apportioning of funds from the office of the county school superintendent cannot be ascertained until the close of the school year 1943-44, since the law sets up that the census for 1943 shall be worked out on a census-average daily attendance ratio.

The census, outside of Marshfield and North Bend, shows a decrease of 56, from last year.

Assuming that Marshfield and North Bend have the same census as they did last year, which is very doubtful, the total for the county would be 7246, with 3734 boys and 3512 girls.

All boys and girls between the ages of 4 and 19 are listed on the school census and this even includes the service men within that age group whose parents reside in Coos county.

The number of persons on each district census is used in compiling both the county school fund and the library fund. The former will be apportioned as soon as the turn-over is made. By law, $100 will be given to each district with an additional $100 to each of the districts which have consolidated within the last five years, for each former district it has annexed. The remaining money in the fund is divided according to the children on the census from the respective districts, the back tax being distributed on the basis of the census for the year in which it would have been distributed had the money come in at the regular time.

The census, as has been reported by each individual clerk, has been compared by the secretary in the office of the county school superintendent, Mrs. Idyle Godard, in order to eliminate any duplications.
