Bare Facts From Bear Creek

"The Column that's Different"
 (By Lars Leneve)

Captain George W. Leneve passed away at his home at Bullards last week, at the age of 88 years. His passing marked one of the last old captains of steamboats which used to ply the Coquille river and Coos Bay in the old days of passenger service supplied by river boats. But "Cap" Leneve, as he was so familiarly known to the old timers, outlived even those sturdy old river boats that he once manned. Today, some of them lie on the bottom of rivers, others are rotting hulks, beached for all time, upon the banks of the Coquille river—ghost ships of a far gone day, days that were born before the birth of many men today and are all but forgotten in the minds of others, who rode their decks before the advent of the automobile and even of passable roads for Old Dobb.

Yes, "Cap" Leneve lived far beyond his time, outliving the sturdy stern-wheelers that he piloted long ago. He lived to see the birth of the automobile, the swift-flying airplane—a startling revolution in locomotion when contrasted to the slow-beating tempo of the old stern-wheeler.

Yes, miracle developed before the aged eyes of the old river captain since the river-passenger boats were beached, never to run again, but like so many aged people, in fact, the majority of all people, he was wont to delve back in memory to his steamboating days—the freighting days and those hard bitten crews, to steamboat wars, to the days of "the steamboat pony express." He lived them all, in their hectic day, but just as those sturdy boats that he used to pilot went, so has gone the good captain, for what should be more fitting than that he should follow in the wake of his beloved ships? Good-bye, "Cap," and pleasant sailing.

Every portion of land and sea under the jurisdiction of the United States is to be covered by the survey, including territorial possessions and waters of which the United States may have interests or rights. It will cover current methods, practices and facilities in commercial fishing, distributing, transporting and marketing, inclusive of recreational fishing, and a digest of all the laws and regulations affecting the industry. A report is to be submitted to congress not later than Jan. 1, 1945.

Recommendations are asked for revised regulations and "such measures as may be deemed necessary for the protection, conservation and management on a sustained yield basis of the fishery and other renewable marine and fresh water resources." The program is also to include stabilization of the fisheries and the federal, state or other assistance needed during the post-war period and "provide for the fisheries benefits comparable to those afforded the food production activities and industries dependent upon the lands." Reason given for the vast undertaking is the urgent need to preserve a source of food supply the future of which might otherwise be menaced by haphazard practices and a lack of cooperation in regulatory measures.

It is the belief of Harold Iokes, secretary of the interior, that on a reclamation project no farm should be larger than 160 acres. This is why he complained against the bill now in congress providing funds for reclamation (after the war) which did not contain this stipulation. Mr. Iokes will have more to say on the subject. He regards 160 acres as sufficient for an irrigated farm and holds that unless there is a limitation

A person hears much talk regarding the trading of horses in the middle of the stream. If the New Deal crowd are still in the middle of the stream after 12 years, it is high time that they traded their ass for an elephant.

Grover Hags, of the armed forces stationed in Virginia and training as a paratrooper, spent two weeks furlough home recently. He was called home by the death of his father-in-law, Jess Gilmore, who was killed while working at the Moore Mill.

Mrs. Craine's school closed on "The Creek" last week. Next term will see a new teacher there as the Craines are planning on going to British Columbia this summer to reside. Mrs. Craine has proved herself an excellent teacher and has won the admiration and respect of all her pupils. It is with deepest regret that we note her departure.

of this character corporation farms will gobble up the irrigated country. His plan is now in effect in the Columbia basin country to irrigate which Grand Coulee dam was built.

There are certain prospective projects where settlers graze livestock and they have prevented development because 160 acres is insufficient to run cattle. But irrigation projects are for growing crops and not raising stock, contends Secretary Iokes, and unless there is an agreement by present owners to dispose of all but 160 acres there will be no project. In one or two favored projects in the northwest 80 acres is considered ample for a settler, the soil being exceptionally fertile and more than sufficient to produce specialty cash crops.

More than 150 letters and telegrams were read on the floor of the house by Representative Cannon of Missouri demanding that the nation return to standard time and asserting that the use of "war" time is not only costly but a contributing factor in the spread of juvenile delinquency. In introducing the letters Mr. Cannon declared that the present daylight saving plan is bringing about wastage of manpower on the farm and absenteeism in the factory, increases the consumption of power and light in every home and place of business and has increased the number of traffic accidents. He declared the schools, churches and farm and labor organizations disapprove of it and demand its repeal.

A bill to repeal the "war" time is now in the hopper of the house and is to be accorded a hearing soon. The clocks were juggled to (1) give war industry workers an extra hour of daylight by getting them up an hour earlier, and (2) save electrical power for war work, but both of these reasons have proved to be fallacious. Originally, daylight saving was initiated by bankers who wished to play golf in the afternoon and did not want competitors doing business while they were playing.

where she has accepted a position for the summer. She is a graduate of this term from the Riverton High School. We predict rapid advancement for this young lady in her new vocation.

D. P. Jenkins who underwent an operation at The Belle Knife Hospital recently, is recovering rapidly. Five will get you ten that he shows up to cast his vote on election day.

Here is our prediction: You may paste it in your scrap-book, if you wish. The war won't end until after the presidential election next fall, and then it will be brought to a whirlwind finish regardless of the result of the election. If The New Deal crowd are still in the saddle we will still be fighting for The Bill of Rights handed down to us by our forebears.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Guess we're pretty lucky in our town, Judge, that we don't have the youth problem you read about in other places."

"Don't know as you can call it lucky, Harold... we saw it coming with the war and we did something about it before it hit us. We gave our 'teen age youngsters the recreational facilities they needed and really wanted. Those familiar with this wartime problem know that young folks go to places they shouldn't only when the proper places are not provided for them. Young people always want to be with others of their own age... want their own type of entertainment. Town after town has found out that once these simple wants are met, the problem is well on its way to being licked."

"Guess I didn't really know how farsighted our town really is, Judge. If we hadn't looked ahead we wouldn't have had anybody or anything to blame but ourselves, would we?"
