which are perpetually dividing the nation, distracting its councils, hurrying it sometimes into fruitless and mischievous wars, and often compelling a submission to dishonorable terms of peace. And of what kind are the men that will strive for this profitable pre-eminence, through all the bustle and cabal, the heat of contention, the infinite, mutual abuse of parties, tearing to pieces the best of characters? It will not be the wise and moderate, the lovers of peace and good order, the men fittest for the trust. It will be the bold and violent, the men of strong passion and indefatigable activity in their selfish pursuits. These will thrust themselves into your government and be your rulers. And these, too, will be mistaken in their expected happiness of their situation, for their vanquished competitors, of the same spirit and from the same motive, will perpetually be endeavoring to distress their administration, thwart their measures, and render them odious to the people. Besides these evils, sir, though we may set out in the beginning with moderate salaries, we shall find that such will not be of long continuance. Reasons will never be wanting for proposed augmentations and there will always be a party for giving more to the rulers, that the rulers may be able, in return, to give more to them. Hence, as all history informs us, there has been in every state and kingdom a constant kind of warfare between the governing and the governed; the one striving to obtain more for its support, and the other to pay less. And this has alone occasioned great convulsions, actual civil wars, ending either in de-throning the princes or enslaving the people.

"Generally, indeed, the ruling power carries its point and we see the revenues of princes continually increasing and we see that they are never satisfied but always in want of more. The more the people are discontented with the oppression of taxes, the greater the prince's need for money to distribute among his partisans and pay the troops that are to suppress all resistance and to plunder at pleasure.

"There is scarce a king in a hundred who would not, if he could, follow the example of Pharaoh—get first all the people's money, then all their land, and then take them and their children as servants forever. It will be said that we do propose to establish kings. I know it. But there as a natural inclination in mankind to kingly government. It sometimes relieves them from aristocratic domination. They would rather have one tyrant than five hundred. It gives more to the appearance of equality among citizens, and that they like. I am apprehensive, therefore, perhaps too much so, that the government of the States may, in future times, end in a monarchy. But this catastrophe, I think, may be long delayed if in our proposed system we do not sow the seeds of contention, faction, and tumult, by making our posts of honor places of profit. If we do, I fear that, though we employ at first a number and not a single person, the number will, in time, be set aside; it will only nourish the fetus of a king (as the honorable gentleman from Virginia very aptly expressed it), and a king will sooner be set over us. It may be imagined by some that this is an Utopian idea and we can never find men to serve us in the executive department without paying them well for their services. I conceive this to be a mistake. Some existing facts present themselves to me which incline me to a contrary opinion.

"The high sheriff of a county in England is an honorable office, but it is not a profitable one. It is rather expensive and, therefore, not sought. But yet it is executed, and well, and usually by some one of the principal gentlemen of the county. In France the office of councillor, or member of their judiciary—parliament—is more honorable. It is therefore purchased at a high price; there are, indeed, fees on the law proceedings, which are divided among them, but these fees do not amount to more than three per cent, on the sum paid for the place. Therefore, as legal interest is at five per cent, they, in fact, pay two per cent for being allowed to do the judiciary business of the nation, which is at the same time entirely exempt from the burden of paying them any salaries for their services. And, indeed, in all cases of public services, the less the profit, the greater the honor. To bring the matter nearer home, have we not seen the greatest and most important of our offices, that of general of our armies, executed for eight years together, without the smallest salary, by a well-known patriot, and this, through fatigues and distresses, in common with the other brave men, his military friends and companions, and the constant anxieties peculiar to his station? And shall we doubt finding three or four men in all the United States with public spirit enough to bear sitting in peaceful council for, perhaps, an equal term, merely to preside over our civil concerns and see that your laws are duly executed? Sir, I have a better opinion of my country. The saving of salaries that may at first be proposed, is not an object with me. The subsequent mischiefs of proposing them is what I apprehend. And, therefore, it is that I move the amendment. If it be not seconded or accepted, I must be contented with the satisfaction of having delivered my opinion frankly and of having done my duty.

It is quite evident that Franklin was speaking from experience, as he had noted the privations, suffering, sacrifices, disappointments through which Washington had gone, with his faithful army, and finally the wonderful achievement and crowning success of that endeavor, and for all these years of the severest test, it was accomplished without compensation.

Turning to Franklin's own life history, we find this, and we quote: "From 1730, when he was chosen clerk of the Pennsylvania General Assembly, until 1786 when he returned from Paris at the close of the American Revolution, he was almost continually in the public service, and this without compensation." In that period, from 1730 to 1786, were many years, and it was in these years that the American Republic cornerstones were laid and its charter, the Declaration of Independence, was brought into being, and that through the wisdom and good judgment of such statesmen as Franklin, Jefferson, Adams, Sherman and Livingston, who were the framers of that wonderful document.

The prime thought of the founders of this great republic, was not only for things as they were at that time, but for the future course on which the nation should travel in order to maintain its place in the sun. They realized that as time went on, that this priceless gift, so dearly won by them, would be entrusted to future generations, whom they hoped would be guided by the words and deeds of the founding fathers and which by them might be respected as traditions and which we of today, in our patriotic zeal, have as just a right to accept as such, and to use as a yardstick in measuring the patriotism of other men.

It must be remembered, that the Tory element surrendered their arms but not their principles and, to this end, we should ever remember Washington's order before Trenton, "See that you put only AMERICANS on guard tonight," and any man who wantonly, or otherwise, tramples down, or disregards any of our cherished traditions, would not be a fitting sentry in the Colonial army. It was the founding Fathers of this republic who made the sacrifices and endured the suffering, to bring into being the things we are enjoying today and the least that we of today can do, is to show our appreciation and respect for the things that made us Americans and will keep us Americans, "our American Tradition."

It has been truly said, "Vigilance is the price of liberty" and it might be added that the only thing that will break a vigil, is idealism, and when one ceases his vigil to follow idealism, he will sooner or later find himself nicely tucked away in a "fool's cradle."

In reading the words of Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and other statesmen of their day, we should feel the weight of their burdens and when we come to exercise our franchise, we should not fail to see that Americans only stand on guard for us.

—R. M. Harrison.
