

People Are Nice

Shoes are queer. Often they tell a great deal about the wearer. If you watch people walk along the street you will learn volumes about shoes in relation to the owners. Short, stout women are quite addicted to high heels—especially if they have trim ankles. Have you noticed? When women first flocked into industry a few years ago they wore ridiculous shoes without a thought to comfort. There is such a difference now. You may see a whole crew of women, after quitting time, with sensible, comfortable shoes. Only here and there do you see one mincing in misery with shoes made to see rather than wear. It can be so painful to look lovely. Pleasure hours are a different matter. I am sure Oregon has the loveliest women in the world. We of the West are so lucky. There is so much freedom of action and thought that one may dress for comfort or to fit one's job, and yet be versatile enough to become another creature in dress-up finery. Not that everyone does, of course. It is just a pleasant possibility. In work and in play shoes tell so many things about you.

Recently I found a worn-out curled up shoe in an orchard on an old homestead site. Just to look at the shoe brought a train of thoughts about the little feet that had once skipped under the trees. Perhaps the owner of the shoe has long since been an adult carrying his burdens in a pair of number tens.

On the way back from the homestead my young companion was looking for a way to cross the stream without wading in the cold water. She found a tree trunk about six inches in diameter curved from bank to bank about four feet over the water, and started slowly across on hands and knees. She giggled nervously a couple of times while I held my breath for her. After a few slips she finally reached the opposite shore and burst out laughing triumphantly. She stopped short when she looked around her. We had been so intent on our objective that neither had noticed the complete wall of blackberry briars on the other side. By walking back upstream she came to a cow trail that led her through to the open.

That incident just goes to show you should select a good, sturdy pair of shoes and carefully determine the course you choose to take, with due thought to where it will lead you. Still, there are usually a number of paths leading to the same goal; so just strike out. You are bound to arrive somewhere, and think of the adventure to be found along the way. Living is wonderful fun, if you make it so. As ever, Pat.

Recalling Old Times At Riverton Last Sunday

Mrs. Jennie Price, Mrs. Lillie Hartig and Mrs. Annie J. Robinson, members of the Business and Professional Women's club, drove to Bandon for a short time Sunday afternoon. Returning home they stopped at the farm home of Mrs. C. M. Hartwell at Riverton, also a Coquille B.P.W. member, where they partook of a "farm supper" and spent a most enjoyable evening.

Mrs. Price is an early pioneer of Riverton and most of her time Sunday was spent in a "square table" discussion of their many old friends and neighbors down there. They visited Mrs. Price's old home site, Mrs. Hartwell acting as guide. All went well until a neighbor called to Mrs. Hartwell telling her the flue was burning out. Thereupon she rushed away, leaving those three pioneers to their own fate. Did they get lost? Well, do real pioneers ever lose their way? Mrs. Price lived on the old Dye place, now owned by the George Huthers, from 1894 until 1911, at which time she moved to Coquille. Mrs. Hartig, a sister, owned and operated a large ranch and boating resort at Bradley Lake for many years, before moving here about a year ago. Mrs. Annie Robinson and her late husband owned a store in Coquille for over thirty years and became well acquainted at that time with most of the Riverton residents, who came by boat to do their trading and other business.
