

Kidneys Must Work Well

For You To Feel Well

At least every day, 1 drop every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If some people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus food, excess acids and other waste matter that must stay in the blood without being in health, they would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Remember, nearly all the important activities of the body depend on the health of the kidneys and, therefore, the kidneys are the most important organs in the body.

Why not try Doan's Kidney Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended by the country over. Doan's Kidney Pills are the only kidney pills that have been in the market for over 40 years. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's Kidney Pills from your druggist. At all drug stores.

Out-of-Doors Stuff

by LANS LANEVE

We have slain a lot of bucks in memory, shot a lot of ducks, geese and China birds and caught thousands of trout during the past six weeks stay in bed. Memories of past hunting and fishing trips helped pass away the time. Yes, that and the telling of hunting and fishing yarns—an exchange of yarns between old hunters and fishermen who visited me.

The out-of-door magazines we read recalled many pleasant memories and also served to boom our pulse higher and higher, making it more and more difficult to lie abed. And now that we are again on our feet and able to get about, even though not as well as usual, the big friendly trees look twice as friendly as of old, and the song of the stream is more cheerful, carrying a message of understanding.

In fact, the whole world looks brighter, but naturally those things which are so dear to our heart are outstanding—all things pertaining to the Great Out-of-Doors.

No one goes through the locked gate, the entrance to the walk leading to the low, picturesque building which housed the embassy until Dec. 7, 1941. On that day all attaches of the embassy were assembled within the enclosure and remained there until they were removed, under guard, to a swanky hotel at White Springs pending shipment, back to Japan.

In the back yard of the embassy there still remain ashes where the Japanese burned incriminating papers, while at the White House the cabinet met hastily to discuss the raid at Pearl Harbor. The lawn is not as carefully kept as it once was. The embassy is a desolate place today. Tourists pause and look at the establishment and wonder how long the Japanese can hold out before the eventual and inevitable unconditional surrender.

When the embassy was closed the Spanish ambassador was designated to take charge of any official business or mail of the Japanese and a hand-painted sign notified the public to this effect. Chains have been placed across the driveway leading to the area where the Japanese housed their automobiles. Within the building everything is as it was left by the departing enemy; it must be for no one can enter. The flowers which were used for decorations have long since resolved themselves into dust, for the Japanese did not take time to throw them out before their hasty exit. A deserted, dismal building is all that remains of the Japanese in Washington, D. C. The guards are there to see that vandals do not break in and loot the place.

Contributing to current confusion over the sugar situation is the statement made on the floor of the house a few days ago by Representative Bender of Ohio that 60,000 tons of sugar has been allocated to Spain. Representative DeLacy of Washington added to the misunderstanding by saying he thought it ridiculous to send sugar to Spain and Portugal to assure a supply of Portuguese brandy. Neither speaker revealed any truth, according to official announcements. Sugar for Spain was allocated from the world pool and not from stocks held in the United States and is, presumably, for table use. There are legitimate reasons for complaint over the sugar shortage without resorting to misrepresentation.

Defending the committee proposal to reclassify fourth-class postage rates as applied to books, Representative McKenzie indulged in an attack upon the Book-a-Month club and other book publishers who are opposed to the measure. The Book-a-Month club, he stated, charges a mailing fee of 11 cents for each book mailed to a subscriber, while a committee check showed that the actual cost was but 3 1/2 cents. With the 600,000 subscribers claimed by the club this would represent a clear profit of $162,000 annually. Other book publishers profit proportionately from the collecting of excess mailing fees, he said, and it was from these that the most vehement opposition had come.

Increase in the rate for sending books by mail is sought on the ground that the service is rendered at a loss to the postal department, thereby creating a deficit which is made up from the profit derived from transporting first-class mail. The proposed increase would not apply to the circulation of books between churches, schools and libraries, and special consideration would be given for the sending of bibles through the mail.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 2—It is still under guard, the Japanese embassy on Massachusetts avenue in Washington, D. C. There is a patrol booth in which a Washington policeman sits night and day, when he is not stretching his legs on the sidewalk. Half a block away, on a vacant lot at the approach to a bridge spanning Rock creek park, the grass has been worn down by the wheels of automobiles in which, from time to time, FBI agents sit through the night to supplement the watch being kept by the lone policeman.

Buick Getting Ready To Turn Out Cars

Plans have been announced by the Buick Division of General Motors Corporation for the largest peace time expansion in the 40 years history of the company by which facilities will be provided for a projected 40 per cent increase in employment opportunity over pre-war levels.

At the same time, it was announced that the 1946 Buick car is ready for manufacture and that new construction and tooling is in progress as Buick reconverts its released war plants to automobile output. Many of the company's factories will continue in war production.

The plans include a reconversion, modernization and expansion program, designed to equip Buick to produce its share of the industry's allotment of automobiles this year and provide for post war capacity of upwards of 350,000 cars annually.

Authorized as part of corporation-wide post war planning looking to maximum contribution to the national economy, they provide for building construction aggregating 1,325,000 square feet of new factories, at Flint, Mich., the re-establishment of war disrupted manufacturing processes, new engineering and research facilities and the substantially increased post war capacity.

The first phase, reconversion to initial car production, is being affected rapidly, and Buick will be among the first to ship new cars to dealers this fall.

At the projected post war rate of production, which is subject to many economic factors such as taxes, price controls, labor costs and the like, it is estimated that Buick in its Flint plants alone would employ more than 22,000 and that through its supplying sources such as the manufacturers of accessories, bodies, rubber, steel, glass and the like, as well as outlying General Motors assembly plants, additional thousands of jobs would be provided.

The re-establishment of pre-war operations plus expansion to provide facilities for more than 350,000 cars annually will require the largest building construction and equipment program in General Motors history. The new buildings will replace obsolete structures and provide modern areas for sheet metal and car assembly operations, additional floor space for engineering and experimental work as well as additions to other factories to accommodate the proposed modernization and expansion.

It is quite possible that new Buick cars will roll from the assembly lines within 90 days after the War Production Board's release of materials on July 1, although this prospect is not at present favorable in view of the material situation, particularly steel.

The 1946 Buick car will feature new elements of streamlining and styling, materials applications and new engineering developments. With and release some time ago by the War Production Board of manpower and materials for product development, engineering models have been completed and the new cars are now ready for production.

Larger Registration at U. of O. Expected For This Year

A sharp upspring in enrollment is in prospect at the University of Oregon this fall with more than 500 freshman applications for admittance already in. The trend is definitely toward the high prewar level.

With a capacity enrollment in prospect the administration is urging that all students file applications for housing at an early date. If the university administration is advised in time there will be ample housing for all, Dean Karl W. Onthank, head of personnel administration, believes. But, he advises, time must be allowed so that preparations can be made.

Applications for dormitory rooms are being received by Mrs. Genevieve Turnipseed, director of dormitories. The co-operative houses on the campus, four for women and one for men, are now taking applications from qualified students. And two new sororities—Delta Zeta and Zeta Tau Alpha—will swell the capacity of the sororities on the campus.

Warning is given that rooms off the campus will be scarce and students should not rely on obtaining housing from this source. The only certain way to obtain housing, Dean Onthank states, is to file application for the desired university facilities immediately.

Coos Land Sales First Half Of 1945

(By Judge L. D. Felshelm in Western World)

Coos county land sales numbered 246 during the first six months of 1945, totaling $47,978.87 in returns, according to H. R. Clark, land agent in charge of the county land department, under jurisdiction of the County Court.

The report includes only deals that have been completed and does not reflect the total activity of the department. In fact the major portion of the work connected with several large timberland deals was done during this period, but returns on these will not be listed until the deeds are issued and final payment is received. The returns on these timberland deals will add up to probably three times the total returns from the 246 sales.

A breakdown of the 246 sales shows that they ranged in prices from $5.00 to $3,964.00. Only ten sales were for amounts of more than a thousand dollars each. Ninety-six were for amounts ranging from $100.00 to $1,000.00, and all the rest were for less than $100.00 each.

The list of sales does not include a large number of other deals for which applications to purchase have been submitted and that are under negotiation.

It will interest taxpayers to know that the money from all sales of property acquired by the county on tax foreclosures does not go into the coffers of the county to be spent for county purposes, but instead, is distributed among various taxing units through which the taxes were levied. The county treasury receives only its percentage, based on the amount of its tax levies for the years covered by the foreclosures, plus a small percentage for expenses involved in handling the foreclosures and the sales of the property.

The distribution of funds from land sales benefits practically every city, school district, and other taxing unit in the county, and the amounts received each year have become important items in the way of "anticipated revenue" at the time of making the annual budgets.

Dr. De La Rhue Took Contact Lens Course

Dr. T. De La Rhue recently returned from Portland and San Antonio, Texas, at which points he took post-graduate courses in contact lens technique. Contact lenses are the newest development in the treatment of eyes and correction of sight trouble, Dr. De La Rhue states. He was gone nearly two months.
