Oregon Stockmen Plan Control Means For Cattle Grub Pest Problems

Control of cattle grubs by use of rotenone dust; sprays or dips will be undertaken this winter by an increasing number of Oregon stockmen and dairymen with the aid of the O. S. C. Extension service which is arranging for a number of demonstrations in counties where sufficient interest develops.

Farmers know the cattle grub as the pest which produces numerous bumps or swellings along the backs of cattle during the winter months. The grub develops as an adult into the heel fly which attacks cattle in late winter and early spring, explains Robert E. Rieder, extension entomologist, and H. A. Lindgren, extension animal husbandman

The time for application of rotenone for grub control is during the winter and must be completed before any of the grubs mature in the backs of the animals and have a chance to escape. The best time for application varies in different sections of the state but livestock men are advised to be on the lookout for the appearance of the grubs from early December on.

Ordinarily three treatments at 30-day intervals are required to catch all of the grubs. The most effective insecticide for controlling this pest is a five per cent rotenone applied either as a spray, dust or a dip, says Rieder.

Spray Treatment Listed

A spray formula consists of 7½ pounds of 5 per cent rotenone dust in 100 gallons of water applied with a power sprayer that will develop 400 pounds pressure. This amount of spray will treat from 150 to 200 animals per hour if adequate chutes are available, at a cost of less than two cents per head.

If dipping facilities are used, 10 pounds of 5 per cent rotenone per 100 gallons of water plus two ounces of a wetting agent, such as sodium lauryl sulphate, is recommended by the U. S. Bureau of Entomology.

The average dairyman with relatively few cattle to treat may prefer using a 5 per cent rotenone dust which can be applied with a home-made duster made by punching nail holes in the lid of a quart jar. The hair of the animal is lightly ruffled during the application so the powder sifts through onto the skin. One quart of powder will treat 15 to 20 cattle.

County Agent George Jenkins has additional information on cattle grub control.

Dyes Transform Cotton Sacks Into Lovely Dress Goods Material

Availability of feed sacks on farms, made of good quality cotton material, has led to the introduction of a project not active for many years in the home economics extension program in Oregon. This is a project on dying and tinting, which Miss Lucy Lane, extension specialist in clothing at Oregon State college, demonstrated in Coos county recently.

Miss Lane put on a demonstration for 21 regional leaders in the county who will in turn repeat the demonstration on dying woolens and rayon as well, using a new all-purpose dye for the latter. Mrs. Cecilia Van Winkle assisted in the demonstration and will be in turn assisted by Mrs. Lloyd Davenport, county home extension chairman, in continuing the project in the county.

The project can be extended to other counties if demonstrations are requested by the county home extension council. A mimeographed circular containing the instructions on dyeing given by Miss Lane is available free from Cecilia Van Winkle, home demonstration agent, at the court house.
