WINDOWS

I have always had a window, wherever I have been: A slit cut somewhere in my walls, to let the "outside in," And I am quite contented to wash or sew or cook Because there is an outlet thro which my eye can look, And even out of sleeping, between the casement bars I wake to peace of moonlight, or pregnant dark, or stars, And Tho I may not enter yet those boundless regions far, Because I have a window I know such regions are, And not the thickest dungeon can be a prison quite If thro some crack or cranny there falls a ray of light, So, if your stony dungeon has no gleam of hope at all, Oh, take the saw of faith, and cut a window in your wall! —Frances Holmstrom
