Holimon's Start First Cleaners With $17.40

BY ELLEN NESBITT

It's not every day you can buy a business for $17.40. But that is just what Lou Holimon paid for his first cleaners establishment just forty years ago in Crossett, Arkansas. "Of course," he went on to explain, "Practically all the work was done by hand at that time and very little equipment was needed." Tired of the extreme heat and cold and severe electrical storms of Arkansas, Mr. and Mrs. Holimon moved to Oregon where Mr. Holimon had a brother. They started the cleaning business in Coquille on May 18, 1940.

Mrs. Holimon has had her first experience in the cleaning trade since coming to Coquille and she has become very proficient. Russell, the Holimon's son, who is also with the business, was more or less brought up in a cleaner's shop.

The Holimon's are enthusiastic about Coquille and are satisfied with the business they have built up. They would, however, like to expand in the future, putting in an alteration department.
