

Bobcat Caught In Wire Fence

There are more ways than one of killing a cat, or a bobcat for that matter. Basil Arnold of Rink creek, who several times has been in the news for his prowess in destroying bobcats, has a new and different story to tell this week.

While rounding up his sheep and cattle before the beginning of the hunting season, Mr. Arnold came upon a bob cat strung up on the wires of one of his fences. The cat, apparently had caught his claws in the cross wires at the top of the 39-inch fence while attempting to jump over. Trying to extricate himself, he had corkscrewed himself around the wires, head down, and had died there.

At Fairview
