"G. I." Brothers Operate Service Station

The G. I. Mobil Service Station in Coquille is well-named in that the partners who operate the business, Mason and Wilson Dalrymple, are both ex-service men. In fact from a family of six Dalrymple brothers, six of the brothers served in the United States army.

The two Dalrymple brothers took over the service station, on August 1, 1946. Previous to that time, Mason had worked at the station for the former owner, Claude Perkins. When Perkins decided to sell, Mason and his brother, Wilson, who then worked for the Coos Bay Lumber company, pooled resources and became partners in the business.

Both brothers had had previous experience in the automotive line. Mason had worked in service stations and garages in his native state of South Dakota before coming to Coquille in September, 1941, and Wilson had worked for Southwestern Motors and for Ford Garage in Coquille after his arrival here in March, 1941.

Since 1946 the brothers with part-time assistance of two other brothers, John and Dale, have built up a worth while business. In addition to the regular service station work, they are kept busy with automotive repair work. They stock a line of automotive accessories and parts which they are fully experienced in installing.

Customers who stop at the G. I. Mobil Service Station, located strategically on highway 101, at the entrance to town, are assured of courteous and prompt service at all times.
