STATE PROPERTY TAX
State officials, particularly legislators, are alarmed at the steadily increasing number of bond issues being voted for by the people. Many are predicting a state property tax next year.

"When things settle down from this post war bulge we are in and income tax returns drop, property owners will find their homes hocked for bonds voted by the people that will have to be paid by heavy property taxes."

That is the way a seasoned legislator put it.

A sharp line is becoming distinguishable between non-taxpayers and property taxpayers. There are predictions that in future elections when bond issues are being voted on that both groups will have active organizations campaigning for or against bonding measures that are not of an emergency nature.

RE-APPRAISAL EXPENSIVE

The North Clackamas county incident, where property owners claim their property valuations were boosted and other left at the old appraisal by the assessor, now are demanding a complete re-appraisal of all property in the state.

State Tax Commissioner Robert MacLean, in charge of assessment and taxation, estimates it would take ten years to complete a statewide re-appraisal program at a cost of $600,000.

QUITS LEGISLATURE

Representative Alex G. Barry of Multnomah county filed his resignation at the capitol last week. He served a term in the United States senate and three terms in the Oregon state legislature. He is not a candidate for re-election.

David O'Hara, director of the state elections bureau, said that Multnomah county commissioners would not be called on to select a replacement for Barry, unless a special session of the legislature is called before the next session.
