Eugene Wedding Of Interest To Powers

A wedding of interest to the people of Powers was held Sunday at 3 p. m. in the Baptist church in Eugene when Miss Dorothy West, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Kuska of Powers, was joined in holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Price Roop, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Roop of Eugene.

The bride, given in marriage by her mother, wore a traditional dress of white satin with lace trim with train and fingertip veil of French illusion with lace trim and held in place by a seed pearl crown. She carried Tallman roses centered with an orchid, which was later used as her going away corsage. Rev. A. C. Grimes, formerly of Powers but now of Salem, officiated.

Mrs. Delores Long of Myrtle Point, sister of the bride, was matron of honor and wore rose-colored crepe and carried white gladioli. The three bridesmaids, all co-workers of the bride at the First National Bank of Eugene, wore pastel shades of blue, pink and yellow formals, and carried gladioli tied with ribbons harmonizing with their frocks. Another co-worker sang the Lord's Prayer and "I Love You Truly."

The four ushers were classmates of the groom from the University of Oregon where he was graduated in this year's class. Best man was his brother, Wesley Roop of Eugene.

Mrs. Kuska, mother of the bride, wore a powder blue formal, while Mrs. Roop, mother of the groom, was attired in a green crepe gown.

After a honeymoon at Lake Louise, Canada, the couple will be at home in La Grande, where the groom will teach in the high school and also will lead the Baptist Youth Movement at the Baptist church. Dorothy is a graduate of the Powers high school and attended business college in Eugene before going to work in the First National Bank.

OUT OF THE WOODS

By Jim Stevens

Sawdust Walls • • • Fred Cassidy—not Hopalong—had heating troubles all last winter—and who hadn't? Fred deserves our aid and comfort, for he is one of the best friends going, to both writers and loggers. He is a crack salesman for a big book store, and this is a business that takes both words and trees, making jobs in the timber and at the typewriter.

I hear from a neighbor of Cassidy's that he has a furnace in his new home that cost him sixty hard bucks a month to fuel during the six cold months of winter. And now he is exploring all the angles on what to do about it before another cold season breaks.

This, of course, is the smart thing for any house dweller to do. Now is the time to start work on the winter heating problems.

Insulation is one answer. The cheapest and most efficient form is sawdust, if it is good and dry—and flea-free—when applied to ceiling and walls. It's been in my ceiling for 25 years. Works fine. Nothing wrong with it that I can see. I urge it on Mr. Cassidy.

But first, I recommend his reading one of the books that he sells from the stacks in his own store. "Home Repairs Made Easy"

At other times in this space I've enthused over seven dollars worth of information for the house owner in a giant book put out by Doubleday. Mr. Cassidy sells it, I know, but I have a hunch he has never read it. He should do so now, turning to the heating section, where he will find that the first necessity for gas-fired heat is "a tight house." This means insulation to the utmost.

And this, according to "Home Repairs Made Easy," means a basement snugged in with storm windows and doors and strip materials. If there is no basement, and if there is room to hunker up under the floor, then nail paper and shiplap to the joists from underneath. When the floor sits high on short studs that rise from plates on basement wall or foundation, paper and lumber sheathing are called for to make inside walls.

The simple, plain, low-cost shiplap board has been backed off the map in many a building area by expensive and high-powered promotion for manufactured form of insulation. But it is really hard to beat an inch of nature's wood for insulation value. In this value the wood inch is superior to the brick foot or the concrete foot. No other form of insulation is easier to apply. I make the statement out of some expensive experience. And add that shiplap insulation increases the structural strength of the house.

As The Sparks Fly Upward
The sun also rises, and so does heat of any kind. Fred Cassidy needs to consider this fact in relation to his attic floor and house roof, just as he needs to wall off the cold winds from his first floor, in tackling his heating problem.

Up here again I say, "Sawdust in the ceiling joists," as an answer to the problem that has worked well in my house for 25 years. Another that I've tested at my own expense is the double roof of red cedar shingles. Never put composition shingles on cedar, though—they sweat and rot the good wood.

These are pointers that I missed in the big book, "Home Repairs Made Easy," that I recommend from the store stock of Fred Cassidy. Anyhow, now's the time to go into action on next winter's need for insulation.

Canned fruit cocktail, honey dew balls, sliced banana and halved orange slices make an interesting combination of flavors. Top with a scoop of cottage cheese for a salad, or one of ice cream for dessert.
