Lutherans Believe that CHRIST Is GOD

Yes, Lutherans believe that Christ is God. They believe this because they believe the Bible. And the Bible clearly claims that Christ is God by ascribing to Him divine names, divine attributes, divine accomplishments, and divine honor and glory. The Bible gives Him a divine name, for instance, when in the Gospel of John it calls Him "Lord and God," two names which Christ accepted with approval. The Bible ascribes to Him divine attributes when it says that He was "in the beginning," that He will be "forever," that He has "all power," and that He "knows all things." The Bible credits Him with divine accomplishments when it says "all things were made by Him" and "He upholds all things by the Word of His power." The Bible ascribes to Him divine honor and glory, when it says: "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father," giving Him an honor equal to that of His Father. The Bible makes clear again and again that only a divine Christ could have saved a doomed humanity. Only "the blood of Jesus Christ, GOD'S SON," could have availed to pay for human guilt. That is why the Lutheran Church, along with all Christians of all times, asserts its unwavering faith in the deity of Christ.
