Ideas from other editors

From the Suburban List, Essex Junction, Vermont: The Federal Department of Agriculture recently published a booklet in which it finds that one-fourth of the families who live on American farms still have cash incomes of less than $1,000 a year. That booklet represented more than a year of study and preparation.

It may be that a cash income of $1,000 a year is what the investigators came up with. I didn't get the booklet so cannot analyze how such figures were arrived at. However, I doubt that so large a number of farm families have so small a cash income.

Just note that is stated as cash income. That is entirely different than the total income of a farmer. Pretty much all farm families get a large part of their living from their own land. They don't have to buy vegetables, some fruit and many of them get beef and pork from their own efforts.

The amazing thing is the proposal of the federal government to assist these farmers by educating them to get off the farm. It would turn them into laborers or mechanics instead of trying to help them be better farmers with a large income.

In all my life, with considerable knowledge of farm conditions, I never heard such as asinine proposal made. It is worse than stupid or silly. And there is nothing realistic about it.

If one-fourth of the farmers of this nation are taken away from production, agriculture would drop to a serious point. Here in Vermont it would just about destroy rural life.

What in the world are the government officials talking about by taking a farmer and putting him into industry. Where in the world could a farmer, 45, 50 or 60 years old get a job? No matter what his ability, he would not be hired on account of his age. Then there are many, many farmers who are over 60 years old.

Many of the smaller dairy farmers in Vermont get some help from their children. They manage to work along without paying out much if any for labor. Some of them get income from other products besides milk. They manage to get along and pay their bills because they know the value of a dollar. They know that value because it is hard to get.

It is my idea that this plan of educating farmers to be industrial workers was conceived in the mind of some gravel-chast experts (?) who know nothing at all about farm operations and still less about how the small farmer gets along.
